

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

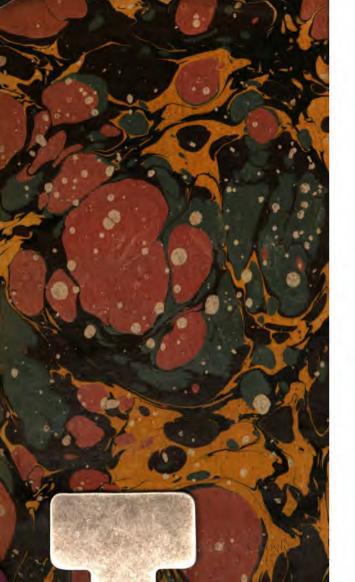

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at http://books.google.com/

256 f: 2873

JOSEPH ANDREWS.

Vol. II.

A

THE ## HISTORY

OFTHE

ADVENTURES

O'P

JOSEPH ANDREWS

And his Friend

Mr. A.B.R.A.H.A.M. A.D.A.M.S.
IN-TWO VOLUMES.

Written in Imitation of

The Manner of CERVANTES, Author of Don QUIXOTE.

By HENRY FIELDING, Esq.
VOLUME the SECOND.

LONDON:

Printed for B. Long, and T. PRIDDEN.
M. DCC. LELIRI.

CONTENTS

OF THE

SECOND VOLUME.

BOOK THIRD.

CHÁP. L

MATTER presutory in praise of biogram page 13.

C H A P: II.

A night scene, wherein several wonderful adventures besel Adams and hit sellow-travellers.

C H A P. III.

In which the gentleman relates the history of his life. 38.

C H A P. IV.

A description of Mr Wisson's way of living.
The tragical adventure of the dog, and other grave matters.

A: 3

OF CONTENTS

CHAP. V.

A disputition on schools, held be the road between Mr Abraham Adams and Joseph; and a discovery not unrealisme to them both: 87

C H A P. VL.

Moral reflections by Joseph Andrews, with the bunting adventure, and Parson Adams's: miraculous escapes. 94.

C H A R. VIL

A scene of reasting very nicely edapted to the present tuste and times.

C H A P. VIII.

Which fome readers will think too short, and others too lang. 184

E H A P. IX.

Containing or furprising and bloodpadventures - as can be found in this, or perhaps any other authentic history.

131

C H A P. X.

A discourse between the poet and player; of no other use in this bistory, but to divert the teader. 139

C'HAR XID

Gontaining the exhortations of Parson Adams, to his friend in affiction: calculated for the instruction and improvement of the reader.

146.

C H. A. P. XII

More adventures which me hope will as much place as surprise the reader. 152

CHAR XIII

A curious dialogue which passed between Me.
Abraham Adams and Mr Poter Pounce, hetter worth reading than all the works of Colley Cibber and many others.
183

BOOK FOURTH

C H A P. I.

THE arrival of Lady Booky and the rest as Booky half.

C H. A. P. II.

Adialogue between Mr Abraham Adams and the Lady Rooby.

C H A P. IIL

What passed between the Ludy and Ladyed Scout.

C H A P. IV.

A short chapter, but very full of matter; particularly the arrival of Mr Booby and his Lady. 187

C. A A P. V.

Consaining justice business: curious precedents of depositions, and other matters necessary to be perused by all justices of the peace and their clerks.

C H A P. VI.

Of which you are defired to read no more than you like. 200.

C H A P. VII.

Philosophical reflections, the like not to be founds in any light French romance. Mr Booby's grave advice to Joseph, and Fanny's encounter with a beau.

C H A P. VIII.

A discourse which bappened between Mr Adams, Mrs Adams, Joseph, and Fanny, with some behaviour of Mr Adams which would be called by some sew readers very low, absurd and unnatural.

C H A P. IX.

A visit which the good Lady Booby and her polite friend paid to the Parson. 233

C H A P. X.

The biftory of two friends, which may afford an ufeful lesson to all those persons who happen to take up their residence in married families., 239

CHAP: XI

In which the hiftery is continued.

250.

C'H A P. XII.

Where the good-natured reader will fee something which will give him no great pleasures. 216.

CHAP. XIII.

The biftery returning to the Lady Booby, gives fome account of the terrible conflict in her breaft between love and pride; with what happened on the present discovery. 260.

F CONTENTS.

C H A P. XIV.

Containing several curious night adventures, in which Mr Adams sell into many hairbreadth scapes, partly owing to his goodness and partly to his inadvertency. 268

C H A P. XV.

The arrival of Gaffer and Gammer Andrews, with another person not much expedied; and a persett solution of the difficulties raised by the pediar. 278

C H A P. XVI.

Being the last. In which this true history is brought to a happy conclusion. 285

THE

HISTORY

OF THE

ADVENTURES

O F

JOSEPH ANDREWS, and his Friend
Mr Abraham Adams.

Written in Imitation of

The manner of CERVANTES, Author of Don QUIXOTE.

BOOK THIRD.

C H A P. I.

Matter presatory in praise of Biography.

OTWITHSTANDING the preference which may be vulgarly given to the authority of those romancewriters, will entitle their books, "the history " of England, the history of France, of Spain, &c. it is most certain, that truth is to be found only in the works of those who celebrate the lives of great men, and are commonly called biographers, as the others should indeed be termed topographers or chorographers: words which might well mark the distinction between them: it being the business of the latter chiefly to describe countries and cities, which, with the affiftance of maps, they do pretty juftly, and may be depended upon: but as to the actions and characters of men, their writings are not quite fo authentic, of which there needs no other proof than those eternal contradictions occurring between two topographers who undertake the history of the same country: for instance, between my Lord Clarendon and Mr Whitelock, between Mr Echard and Vos. I.

Rapin, and many others: where, facts being fet forth in a different light, every reader believes as he pleases; and indeed the more judicious and suspicious very justly esteem the whole as no other than a romance, in which the writer hath indulged a happy and fertile invention. But though these widely differ in the narrative of facts; fome afcribing victory to the one, and others to the other party: fome representing the fame man as a rogue, while others give him a great and honest character; yet all agree in the scene where the fact is supposed to have happened, and where the person, who is both a rogue and an honest man, lived. Now with us biographers the case is different; the fasts we deliver may be relied on, though we often miftake the age and country wherein they happened: for though it may be worth the examination of critics, whether the shapherd Chrysostom, who, as Cervantes informs us. died for love of the fair Marcella, who hated him, was ever in Spain, will any one doubt but that fuch a filly fellow hath really existed? Is there in the world such a sceptic as to disbelieve the madness of Cardenio, the perfidy of Ferdinand, the impertinent curiofity of Anselmo, the weakness of Camilla. the irrefolute friendship of Lothario; tho' perhaps as to the time and place where those feveral persons lived, that good historian may be deplorably deficient? but the most known instance of this kind is in the true history of Gil Blas, where the inimitable biographer hath made a notorious blunder in the country of Dr Sangrado, who used his patients as a vintner doth his wine veffels, by letting out their blood, and filling them up with Doth not every one, who is the leaft versed in physical history, know that Spain was not the country in which this Doctor lived? The same writer hath likewise erred in the country of his archbishop, as well as that of those great personages whose understandings were too sublime to taste any thing but tragedy, and in many others. The fame mistakes may likewise be observed in Scarron, the Arabian Nights, the History of Marianne, and le Paisan Parvenu, and perhaps some few other writers of this class, whom I have not read, nor do at present recollect; for I would by no means be thought to comprehend those persons of surprising genius, the authors of immense romances, or the modern novel and Atalantis writers; who, without any affiftance from Nature or history, record persons who never were, or will be; and tacts which never did, nor possibly can happen: whole heroes are of their own creation, and their brains the chaos whence all their materials are felected. Not that such writers deserve no honour; fo far otherwise, that perhaps they merit the highest: for what can be nobler than to be as an example of the wonderful extent of human genius! One may apply to them what Balzac fays of Aristotle, that they are a second nature, (for they have no communication with the first): by which authors of an inferior class, who cannut fland alone, are obliged to support themselves as with crutches: but thele of whom I am now speaking, seem to be possessed of those stilts, which the excellent Voltaire stells us in his Letters, scarry the genius far off, but with an irregular pace;' indeed far out of the fight of the reader,

Beyond the realm of Chaos and old Night.

But to return to the former class, who are contented to copy Nature, instead of forming originals from the confused heap of matter in their own brains; is not such a book as that which records the atchievements of the renowned Don Quivote, more worthy the name of a history than even Mariana's for whereas the latter is confined to a panticular period of time, and to a particular nation; the former is the history of the world in general, at least that part which is polished by laws, arts. and sciences; and of that from the time it was first polished to this day; nay, and forwards as long as it shall so remain.

I shall now proceed to apply these observations to the work before us: for indeed I have fet them down principally to obviate fome obstructions, which the good-nature of mankind, who are always forward to fee their friends virtues recorded, may put to particular parts. I question not but several of my readers will know the lawyer in the stagecoach, the moment they hear his voice. is likewise odds, but the wit and the prude meet with some of their acquaintance, as well as all the rest of my characters. To prevent therefore any fuch malicious applications, I declare here once for all, I describe not men, but manners; not an individual, but a fpe-Perhaps it will be answered. Are not the characters then taken from life? To which I answer in the affirmative; nay, I believe I might aver, that I have writ little more than I have feen. The lawyer is not only alive, but hath been so these 4000 years; and I hope God will indulge his life as many yet to come. He hath not indeed confined him'elf to one profession, one religion, or one country; but when the first mean selfish creature appeared on the human stage, who made Self the centre of the whole creation, would give himself no pain, incur no danger, advance no meney to affift or preferve his fellow-creatures: then was our lawyer born: and whilst such a person as I have described exists on earth. fo long shall he remain upon it. It is therefore doing him little honour, to imagine he endeavours to mimic some little obscure fellow, because he happens to resemble him in one particular feature, or perhaps in his profession: whereas his appearance in the world is calculated for much more general and noble purposes; not to expose one pitiful wretch to the small and contemptible circle of his acquaintance; but to hold the glafs to thoufands in their closets, that they may contemplate their deformity, and endeavour to reduce it, and thus by fuffering private mortification, may avoid public shame This places the boundary between, and distinguishes the fatirist from the libeller; for the former privately corrects the fault for the benefit of the person, like a parent; the latter publicly exposes the person himself, as an example to others, like an executioner.

There are besides little circumstances to be considered; as the drapery of a picture, which though fashion varies at different times, the resemblance of the countenance is not by those means diminished. Thus, I believe, we may venture to say, Mrs Tow-wouse is coeval with conclawyer; and though perhaps during the changes which fo long an existence must have passed through, she may in her turn have stood behind the bar at an inn; I will not foruple to affirm; she hath likewise in the revolution of ages fat on a throne. In short, where extreme turbulence of temper; avarice, and an insensibility of human misery, with a degree of hypocrify, have united in a semale composition. Mrs. I ow wouse was that woman; and where a good inclination, eclipsed by a poverty of spirit and understanding, both glimmered forth in a man, that man hath been no other than her fneaking husband.

I shall detain my reader no longer than to give him one caution more of an opposite kind: for as in most of our particular characters we mean not to lash individuals, but all of the like fort; so in our general descriptions, we mean not universals, but would be understood with many exceptions: for inflance, in our description of high people, we cannot be intended to include fuch, as whilft they are an honour to their high rank, by a well-guided condescension, make their superiority as easy as possible, to those whom fortune hath chiefly placed below them. Of this number I could name a peer no lest elevated by nature than by fortune, who, whilk be wears the noblest enfigns of honour on his person, bears the truest stamp of dignity on his mind, adorned with greatness, enriched with knowledge, and embellished with I have feen this man relieve with generofity, while he hath conversed with freedom, and be to the same person a patron and a companion. I could name a commoner raised higher above the multitude by fuperior talents, than is in the power of his prince to exalt him; whose behaviour to those he hath obliged is more amiable than the obligation itself, and who is so great a master of affability, that if he could divest himself of an inherent greatness in his manmer, would often make the lowest of his acquaintance forget who was the master of that palace in which they are fo courteoutly entertained. These are pictures which must be, I believe, known: I declare they are taken from the life, and not intended to exceed By those high people, therefore, whom have described, I mean a set of wretches, who, while they are a difgrace to their anceftors, whose honours and fortunes they inherit, (or perhaps a greater to their mother, for fuch degeneracy is fcarce credible) have the insolence to treat those with difregard, who are at least equal to the founders of their own splendor. It is, I fancy, impossible to conceive a spectacle more worthy of our indignation, than that of a fellow who is not only a blot in the efcurcheon of a great fair mily, but a fcandal to the human species, maintaining a supercilious behaviour to men who are an honour to their nature, and a difference to their fortune.

And now, reader, taking these hints along with you, you may, if you please, proceed to the fequel of this our true history.

C H A P. II.

A night scene, wherein several wonderful adventures besel Adams and his sellow travellers.

I T was so late when our travellers left the inn or ale-house, (for it might be called either) that they had not travelled many miles, before night overtook them, or met them, which you please. The reader must excuse me if I am not particular as to the way they took; for as we are now drawing near the seat of the Boobies, and as that is a ticklish name, which mulicious persons may apply according to their evil inclinations, to several worthy country 'squines, a race of men whom we look upon as entirely inossentive, and for whom we have an adequate regard, we shall lend no assistance to any such malicious purposes.

Darkness had now overspread the hemisphere, when Fanny whispered Joseph, 'that' she begged to rest herself a little; for that' she was so tired, she could walk no farther.' Joseph immediately prevailed with parson Adams, who was as brisk as a bee, to stop. He had no sooner seated himself, than he lamented the loss of his dear Eschylus; but was a little comforted, when reminded, that if he had it in his possession, he could not see to read.

The sky was so clouded, that not a star appeared. It was indeed, according to Milton, darkness visible. This was a circumstance, however, very favourable to Joseph; for Fanny, not suspicious of being overseen by Adams, gave a loose to her passion, which she had never done before; and reclining her head on his bosom, threw her arm carelessly round him, and suffered him to lay his cheek close to hers. All this insused such happiness into Joseph, that he would not have changed his turf for the sinest down in the sinest palace in the universe.

Adams fat at fome distance from the lovers, and being unwilling to disturb them, applied himself to meditation; in which he had not spent much time, before he discovered a light at some distance that seemed approaching towards him. He immediately hailed it; but to his forrow and furprise, it stopped for a moment, and then disappeared. He then called to Joseph, asking him, if he had not feen the light. Joseph answered, he had. 'And did you not mark how it vanished?' returned he: though I am not afraid of ghosts, I do not absolutely disbelieve · them.'

LOSEPH ANDREWS.

He then entered into a meditation on those unfubstantial beings; which was foon interrupted by feveral voices which he thought almost at his elbow, though in fact they were not so extremely near. However, he could: distinctly hear them agree on the murder of any one they met. And a little after heard' one of them fay, he had killed a dozen fince. that day fortnight.

Adams now fell on his knees, and commite: ted himself to the care of Providence; and poor Fanny, who likewise heard those terrible words, embraced Joseph so closely, that had not he, whose ears were also open, been apprehensive on her account, he would have thought no danger which threatened only.1 himfelf, too dear a price for fuch embraces.

. Joseph now drew forth his penknife, and Adams having finished his ejaculations, grafped his crabitick, his only weapon, and coming up to Joseph, would have had him quit Fanny, and place her in the rear; but his advice was fruitless, she clung closer to him, not at all regarding the presence of Adams, and in a soothing voice declared, she would die in his arms. Joseph, clasping her with inexpressible eagerness, whispered her, that he preserved death in hers to life out of them. Adams, brandishing his crabstick, said, he despised death as much as any man, and then repeated aloud,

Est hic, est animus contemptor, et illum Qui vita bene credat emi quo tendis, honorem.

Upon this the voices ceased for a moment. and then one of them called out, 'D---n you, ' who is there?' To which Adams was prudent enough to make no reply; and of a fudden. he observed half a dozen lights, which seemed to rife all at once from the ground, and advance brickly towards him. This he immediately concluded to be an apparition, and now beginning to conceive that the voices were of the same kind, he called out, ' in the ame of the Lord, what wouldn't thou have?' He had no fooner spoke than he heard one of the voices cry out, D--n them; here they come;' and foon after, he heard feveral hearty blows, as if a number of men had been engaged at quarter-staff. He was just advancing towards the place of combat, when Joseph, catching him by the skirts, begged him that they might take the opportunity of the dark to convey away Fanny from the danger which threatened her. He presently complied, and Joseph lifting up Fanny, they all three made the best of their way; and without looking behind them, or being overtaken, they had travelled full two miles, poor Fanny not once complaining of being tired, when they faw far off several lights scattered at a small distance from each other, and at the fame time found themselves en the descent of a very steep hill. Adams's foot flipping, he instantly disappeared, which greatly frightened both Joseph and Fanny; indeed, if the light had permitted them to fee it, they would scarce have refrained laughing to fee the Parson rolling down the hill, which he did from top to bottom, without receiving any harm. He then hollowed as loud as he could, to inform them of his fafety, and relieve them from the fears which they had conceived for him. Joseph and Fanny halted some time, considering what to do: at last they advanced a few paces, where the declivity feemed least steep; and then Joseph, taking his Fauny in his arms, walked firmly down the hill, without making a false step, and at length landed her at the bottom, where Adams foon came to them.

Learn hence, my fair countrywomen, to Vol. II. C

confider your own weakness, and the many occasions on which the strength of a man may be useful to you; and duly weighing this, take care that you match not yourselves with the spindle-shanked beaus and petitimaitres of the age, who, instead of being able, like Joseph Andrews, to carry you in Justy arms through the rugged ways and downhill steeps of life, will rather want to support their seeble limbs with your strength and affishance.

Our travellers now moved forwards, where the nearest light presented itself, and having crossed a common field, they came to a meadow, where they feemed to be at a very little distance from the light, when, to their grief, they arrived at the banks of a river. Adams here made a full stop, and declared he could fwim, but doubted how it was possible to get Fanny over; to which Joseph answered, if they walked along its banks, they might be certain of foon finding a bridge, especially as, by the number of lights, they might be ' assured a parish was near.' 'Odso that's ' true indeed,' faid Adams, 'I did not think of that.' Accordingly Joseph's advice being taken, they passed over two meadows. and came to a little orchard, which led them to a house. Fanny begged of Joseph to. knock at the door, affuring him the was fo weary that she could hardly stand on her feet. Adams, who was foremost, performed this ceremony, and the door being immediately opened, a plain kind of a man appeared at it. Adams acquainted him, that they had a voung woman with them, who was fo tired with her journey, that he should be much obliged to him, if he would fuffer her to come: in and rest herself. The man, who saw Fanny by the light of the candle which he held in his hand, perceiving her innocent and modelt look, and having no apprehentions from the civil behaviour of Adams, presently answered, that the young woman was very welcome to rest herself in his house, and sowere her company. He then ushered them into a very decent room, where his wife wasfitting at a table; she immediately rose up. and affilted them in fetting forth chairs, and defired them to fit down, which they had no fooner done, than the man of the house asked them if they would have any thing to refresh themselves with? Adams thanked him, and answered, he should be obliged to him for a cup of his ale, which was likewise chosen by Joseph and Fanny. Whilst he was gone to fill a very large jug with this liquor, his wife told Fanny she seemed greatly fatigued, and defired her to take fomething ftronger than ale; but she refused, with many thanks, faying, it was true she was very much tired, but a little rest she hoped would restore her. As soon as the company were all seated. Mr Adams, who had filled himself with ale, and by public permission had lighted his pipe, turned to the master of the house, asking him, if evil spirits did not use to walk in that neighbourhood? To which receiving no answer, he began to inform him of the adventure which they had met with on the Downs; nor had be proceeded far in his flory, when fomebody knocked very hard at the door. The company expressed some amazement, and Fanny and the good woman turned pale; her husband went forth, and whilft he was absent, which was some times they all remained filent looking at one another, and heard feveral voices discoursing pretty loudly. Adams was fully perfuaded that fpirits were abroad, and began to meditate some exorcisms; Joseph a little inclined to the fame opinion; Fanny was more afraid of men; and the goodwoman herfelf began to fuspect her guests, and imagined those without were rogues belonging to their gang. At length the master of the house returned, and laughing, told Adams he had discovered his apparition; that the murderers were theep-stealers, and the twelve persons murdered, were no other than twelve theeps:

adding, that the shepherds had got the better of them, had secured two, and were proceeding with them to a justice of peace. This '
account greatly relieved thesears of the whole company; but Adams muttered to himself;
'He was convinced of the truth of appariant tions for all that.'

They now fat chearfully round the fire, till the master of the house, having surveyed his guests, and perceived that the cassock, which having fallen down, appeared under Adams's great coat, and the shabby livery of Joseph Andrews, did not well fuit with the familiariaty between them, began to entertain fome fulpicions, not much to their advantage: addreffing himself therefore to Adams, he said, he perceived he was a clergyman by his drefs; and supposed that honest man was his footman. 'Sir,' answered Adams, 'I am a clere gyman at your fervice; but as to that young man, whom you have rightly termed honest, he is at present in nobody's service; he never lived in any other family than that of Lady Booby, from whence he was dif-· charged, I affure you, for no crime.' feph faid, ' he did not wonder the gentleman' was surprised to see one of Mr Adams's charafter condescend to so much goodness with a poor man.' 'Child,' faid Adams, 'I' hould be a hamed of my cloth, if I thought.

a poor man, who is honest, below my notice or my familiarity. I know not how those that think otherwise, can profess themselves followers and servants of him who made no diftinction, unless, peradventure, by preferring the poon to the rich. Sir, faid he, addressing himself to the gentleman, these two poor young people are my parishioners, and I look on them and love them as my children. There is fomething fingular enough in their hiltory, but I have not now time to recount it.' master of the house, notwithstanding the sime. plicity which discovered itself in Adams, knews too much of the world to give a halty beliefto professions. He was not yet quite certain. that Adams had any more of the clergyman. in him than his caffock. To try him therefore further, he asked him. If Mr-Pope had, lately published any thing new? Adams anfwered, ' he had heard great commendations of that poet, but that he had never read. nor knew any of his works.' Ho! ho!'fays the gentleman to himfelf, have I caught your? What,' faid he, have you never feen his Homer?' Adams answered, he had never read any translation of the clas-' fics.' 'Why truly,' reply'd the gentleman, there is a dignity in the Greek language which I think no modern tongue can reach '

Do you understand Greek, Sir?' fald Adams, hastily, "A little Sir,' answered the gentleman. "Do you know, Sir,' cry'd Adams, "where I can buy, an Æschylus? an unlucky misfortune lately happened to mine?' Æschylus was beyond the gentleman, though he knew him very well by name; he therefore returning back to Homer, asked Adams, What part of the Iliad he thought most excellent? Adams return'd, His question would be properer, what kind of beauty was the chief in poetry; for that Homer was equally excellent in them all.

And indeed, continued her what Ciceor ro fays of a complete orator, may well beadapted to a great poet; "He ought to-" comprehend all perfections." Homer didthis in the most excellent degree; it is not without reason therefore, that the philoso-- pher, in the 22d chapter of his Poetics: mentions him by no other appellation than 5 that of The Poet: He was the father of the drama, as well as the epic: not of tragedy only, but of comedy also; for his Margites, which is deplorably loft, bore, fays Aristotle, the same analogy to comedy, as his Odyssey and Iliad to tragedy. To him therefore we owe Aristophanes, as well as Euripides, Sophocles, and my poor Æschylus. But if you please we will confine ourselves

" (at least for the present) to the Iliad, his now bleft work; though neither Ariftotle non "Horace gave it the preference, as I remember, to the Odysley. First, then, as to his. fubject, can any thing be more fimple, and at the fame time more noble? He is rightly s praised by the first of those judicious critics, for not chaling the whole war, which, tho! he fays it hath a complete beginning and. end, would have been too great for the understanding to comprehend at one view. It have therefore often wondered why fo correct a writer as Horace should, in his epistle to Lollies, call him the Trojani Belli Scriptorem. Secondly, his action, termed by Arihotle; Pragmaton Systasis; is it possible for 5 the mind of man to conceive an idea of fuch perfect unity, and at the same time for e replete with greatness? And here I must observe, what I do not remember to have feen noted by any, that Harmotton, that agreement of his action to his subject: for as the fubject is anger, how agreeable is his action, which is war? from which every incident arifes, and to which every epifode ' immediately relates. Thirdly, his snanners, " which Aristotle places second in his defeription of the feveral parts of tragedy, s and which he fays are included in the acstion; I am at a lofs-whether I thould rather admire the exactness of his judgment in the nice distinction, or the immensity of his imagination in their variety. For, as to the former of these, how accurately is the fedate, injured refentment of Achilles distinguished from the hot insulting passion of Agamemnon! How widely doth the brutal courage of Ajax differ from the amiable bravery of Diomedes: and the wildom of Nestor, which is the result of · long reflection and experience, from the cunning of Ulysses, the effect of art and fubtilty only! If we consider their variety we may cry out with Aristotle in his 24th chapter, that no part of this divine poem is destitute of manners. Indeed, I might affirm, that there is feared a character in human nature untouched in some part or other. And as there is no passion which he s is not able to describe, so is there none in his reader which he cannot raife. If he hath any fuperior excellence to the rest, I · have been inclined to fancy it in the pathetic. I am fare I never read with dry eyes the two epifodes, where Andromache is · introduced, in the former lamenting the danger, and in the latter the death of · Hector. The images are fo extremely tender in these, that I am convinced the poet had the worthick and belt heart imaginable.

Nor can I help observing how Sophocles falls fhort of the beauties of the original; in that imitation of the diffusive speech of-Andromache, which he hath put into the mouth of Tecmessa. And yet Sophocles. was the greatest genius who ever wrote tragedy; nor have any of his fuccessors in. that art, that is to fay, neither Euripides, o nor Seneca the tragedian, been able to come near him. As to his fentiments and diction, I need fay nothing; the former are particularly remarkable for the utmost · perfection on that head, namely propriety; and as to the latter, Aristotle, whom doubtless you have read over and over, is very diffuse. I shall mention but one thing more, which that great critic in his division of tragedy called Opfis, or the scenery, and which is as proper to the epic as to the. drama, with this difference, that in the former it falls to the share of the poet, and in the latter to that of the painter. But did ever painter imagine a scene like that in the 13th and 14th Iliad? where the reader fees, at one view, the prospect of . Troy, with the army, drawn up before it ? the Grecian army, camp, and fleet; Jupiter fitting on mount Ida, with his head wrapt in a cloud, and a thunder-bolt in his hand, looking towards Thrace: Neptune driving * through the fea, which divides on each fide to permit his passage, and then seating * himself on mount Samos: the heavens opened, and the deities all feated on their thrones. 'This is fublime! This is poetry!' Adams then rapt out a hundred Greek verses, and with such a voice, emphasis, and action, that he almost frightened the women; and as for the gentleman, he was fo far from entertaining any further suspicion of Adams, that he now doubted whether he had not a bishop in his house. He ran into the most extravagant encomiums on his learning; and the goodness of his heart began to dilate to all the strangers. He said, he had great compassion for the poor young woman, who looked pale and faint with her journey: and in truth he conceived a much higher opinion of her quality than it deserved. faid, he was forry he could not accommodate them all: but if they were contented with his firefide, he would fit up with the men; and the young woman might, if she pleased, partake of his wife's bed, which he advised her to; for that they must walk upward of a mile to any house of entertainment, and that not very good neither. Adams, who liked his feat, his ale, his tobacco, and his company, persuaded Fanny to accept this kind proposal, in which solicitation he was seconded by Joseph. Nor was she very difficultly prevailed on; for she had slept little the last night, and not at all the preceding, so that love itself was scarce able to keep her eyes open any longer. The offer therefore being kindly accepted, the good woman produced every thing eatable in her house on the table, and the guests being heartily invited, as heartily regaled themselves, especially Parson Adams. As to the other two, they were examples of the truth of that physical observation, that love, like other sweet things, is no whetter of the stomach.

Supper was no fooner ended, than Fanny, at her own request, retired, and the good woman bore her company. The man of the house, Adams, and Joseph, who would modestly have withdrawn, had not the gentleman insisted on the contrary, drew round the fireside, where Adams (to use his own words) replenished his pipe, and the gentleman produced a bottle of excellent beer, being the best liquor in his house.

The modelt behaviour of Joseph, with the gracefulness of his person, the character which Adams gave of him, and the friend-ship he seemed to entertain for him, began to work on the gentleman's affections, and raised in him a curiosity to know the singularity which Adams had mentioned in his history. This curiofity Adams was no fooner informed of, than, with Joseph's confent, he agreed to gratify it, and accordingly related -all he knew, with as much tenderness as was possible for the character of Lady Booby: and concluded with the long, faithful, and mutual passion between him and Fanny, not concealing the meanness of her birth and education. These latter circumstances entirely cured a jealousy which had lately risen in the gentleman's mind, that Fanny was the daughter of some person of fashion; and that Joseph had run away with her, and Adams was concerned in the plot. He was now enamoured of his guests, drank their healths with great chearfulness, and returned many thanks to Adams, who had fpent much breath; for he was a circumstantial teller of a ftorv.

Adams told him it was now in his power to return that favour; for his extraordinary goodness, as well as that fund of literature he was master of *, which he did not expect to find under such a roof, had raised in him more curiosity than he had ever known. Therefore, said he, if it be not too troublesome, Sir, your history, if you please.

The author bath by some been represented to have made a blunder here: for Adams had indeed shewn some learning, (say they), perhaps all the author had; but the gentleman hath shewn none, unless his approbation of Mr Adams be such: but surely it would be preposterous in him to call it so. I have, however, norwithstanding this criticism, which I am told came from the mouth of a great.

The gentleman answered, he could not refuse him what he had so much right to insist on; and after some of the common apologies, which are the usual preface to a story, he thus began.

C H A P. III.

In which the gentleman relates the history of his life,

SIR, I am defrended of a good family, and was born a gentleman. My education was liberal, and at a public school, in which I proceeded so far as to become master of the Latin, and to be tolerably versed in the Greek language. My father died when I egrator in a public coffee-house, lest this blunder as it stood in the first edition. I will not have the vanity to apply to any thing in this work, the observation which M. Dacier makes in her presace to her Aristophanes: "Jetiens pour une maxime constante, qu'une beauté mediocre plait plus generalement qu'une beauté sans desaut." Mr Congreve hatte made fach another blunder in his Love for Love, where Tattle tells Miss Prue, 'she should admire him as much for the beauty he commens in her, as if he himself was possessed.

was fixteen, and left me master of myself. He bequeathed me a moderate fortune, which he intended Inhould not receive till I attained the age of twenty-five: for he confantly asferted that was full early enough to give up any man entirely to the guidance of his own difcretion. However, as this intention was to obscurely worded in his will, that the lawvers advised me to contest the point with my truftees: I own I paid to little regard to the inclinations of my dead father, which were sufficiently certain to me, that I followed their advice, and foon succeeded; for the trustees did not contest the matter very obfinately on their fide. 'Sir,' faid Adams, may I crave the favour of your name? The gentleman answered, 'my name was Wilfon, and then preceded

I stay'd a very little while at school after his death; for, being a forward youth, I was extremely impatient to be in the world: for which I thought my pasts, knowledge, and manhood, thoroughly qualified me. And to this early introduction into life, without a guide, I impute all my future missoratures; for besides the obvious mischiefs which attend this, there is one which hath not been so generally observed. The first impression which mankind receives of you, will be very difficult to exadicate. How unhappy, therese fore, must it be to fix your character in life; before you can possibly know its value, or weigh the consequences of those actions which are to establish your suture reputation.

A little under seventeen I lest my school, and went to London with no more than six pounds in my pocket. A great sum as I then conceived; and which I was afterwards surprifed to find fo foon confumed.

The character I was ambitious of attaining was that of a fine gentleman; the first requifites to which I apprehended were to be supplied by a tailor, a periwig-maker, and some sew more tradesmen, who deal in furnishing out the human body. Notwithstanding the lowness of my purse, I found credit with them more easily than I expected, and was soon equipped to my wish. This I own then agreeably surprised me; but I have since learned, that it is a maxim among many tradesmen at the polite end of the town, to deal as largely as they can, reckon as high as they can, and arrest as soon as they can.

The next qualifications, namely, dancing, fencing, riding the great horse, and music, came into my head: but as they required expense and time, I comforted myself, withnegard to dancing, that I had learned a little in my youth, and could walk a minute genteely enough; as to fencing, I thought my good-humour would preferve me from the danger of a quarrel; as to the horfe, I hoped it would not be thought of; and for mufic, I imagined I could easily acquire the reputation of it; for I had heard some of my schools sellows pretend to knowledge in operas, without being able to sing or play on the siddle.

FOSEPH ANDREWS ! 420

Knowledge of the town feemed anotheringredient; this I thought I should arrive are by frequenting public places. Accordingly, I paid constant attendance to them all; by which means I was soon master of the fashionable phrases, learned to cry up the fashionable diversions, and know the names and saces of the most fashionable men and women.

Nothing now seemed to remain but anintrigue, which I was resolved to have immediately; I mean the reputation of it; andindeed I was so successful, that in avery short time I had half a dozen with the finest women in town.

At these words Adams settled a deepgroan, and then, blessing himself, cried out, Good Lord! what wicked times are these!

Not so wicked as you imagine, continued the gentleman; for I assure you, they were all vestal virgins for any thing which I knew to the contrary: the reputation of intriguing with them was all I sought, and was what I arrived at: and perhaps. I only shatured myself even in that; for very probably, the persons to whom I shewed their billets, knew as well as I that they were counterfeits, and that I had written them to myself.

Write letters to yourfelf! faid Adams,

faring

O Sir, answered the gentleman, it is the very error of the times. Half our moderne plays have one of these characters in them. · It is incredible the pains I have taken, and the abfurd methods I employed to traduce: the character of women of distinction. When another had spoken in raptures of any one. I have answered, D-nher, the we shallhave her at H ____ d's very foon.' When he hath replied, 'he thought her viztuous,' I have answered, Ay, thou wilt always think a woman virtuous, till the is in the ftreets; but you and I, Jack or Tom, (turning to another in company) know better! At which I have drawn a paper out of me pocket, perhaps a tailor's bill, and kiffed it. crying, at the fame time, ' By gad I was once · fond of her.'

Proceed, if you please, but do not swear.

any-more, faid: Adams.

Sis, faid the gentleman, I alk your pardon. Well, Sir, in this course of life I continued full three years.— What course of *Siffer? answered Adams: 'I do not remember ber: you have mentioned; any;'---Your peak mark is just; faid the gentleman, fimiling; I should rather have faid; in this course of doing nothing. I remember some time afterwards I wrote the journal of one day, which would serve; I believe, as well for any others during the whole time. I will endeavour to nepeat it to you.

4

: In the morning I arofe, took my great: flick, and walked out in my green frock with my hair in papers, (a grean from Adams), and fauntered about till ten.

Went to the auction; told lady — the had a dirty face; langhed heartily at fomething. Captain — faid; I can't remember what; for Idid not very well hear it; whifpered Lord — bowed to the Duke of —; and was going to bid for a fnuff box; but did not for fear I should have had it.

From 2 to 4, dreffed myfelf. A groan.
4 to 6, dined. A groan.
6 to 8, coffee-house.
8 to 9, Drury Lane play-house.
9 to 10, Lincoln's-Inn-Fields.
10 to 12, Drawing-room.
A great groan.

At all which places nothing happened tworth remark. At which Adams faid, with some vehemence. 'Sir, this is below the lifeof an animal, hardly above vegetation; and I am furprized what could lead a man of vour sense into it.' What leads us intomore follies than you imagine, Doctor, anfwered the gentleman, vanity: for as contemptible a creature as I was, and I affure you, yourself cannot have more contempt for fuch a wretch than I now have. I then admired myfelf, and should have despised a person of your present appearance (you will: pardon me) with all your learning, and these excellent qualities which I have remarked in vou. Adams bowed, and begged him to proceed. After I had continued two years in this course of life, faid the gentleman, an. accident happened which obliged me tochange the scene. As I was one day at St James's coffee-house, making very free with. the character of a young lady of quality, an officer of the guards, who was present, thought proper to give me the lie. I anfwered, I might possibly be mistaken; but I intended to tell no more than the truth. which he made no reply, but by a fcornful fneer. After this I observed a strange coldness in all my acquaintance; none of them spoke to me first, and very few returned me. even the civility of a bow. The company I wied to dise with left me out, and within a week I found myself in as much solitude at St James's, as if I had been in a defart. An honest elderly man, with a great hat and long fword, at last told me, he had a compassion for my youth, and therefore advised me to shew the world I was not fuch a rafcal as they thought me to be. I did not at first understand him: but he explained himself. and ended with telling me, if I would write a challenge to the captain, he would, out of pure charity, go to him with it. A very charitable person truly!' eried Adams. defired till the next day, continued the gentleman, to confider on it, and retiring to my lodgings, I weighed the consequences on both fides as fairly as I could. On the one, I faw the risk of this alternative; either losing my own life, or having on my hands the blood of a man with whom I was not in the leaft angry. I foon determined, that the good which appeared on the other, was not worth this hazard. I therefore resolved to quit the scene, and presently retired to the Temple, where I took chambers. Here I foon got a fresh set of acquaintance, who knew nothing of what had happened to men Indeed they were not greatly to my approbation; for the beaus of the Temple are only the shadows of the others. They are the affectation of affectation. The vanity of these is still more ridiculous, if possible, than of the others. Here I met with fmart felhows, who drank with lords they did not know, and intrigued with women they never saw. Covent-Garden was now the farthest stretch of my ambition, where I shone forth in the balconies at the play-houses, visited whores, made love to orange-wenches, and damned plays. This career was foon put a stop to by my surgeon, who convinced me of the necessity of confining myself to my room for a month. At the end of subject, having had leisure to reflect. I resolved to quit all further conversation with beaus and finarts of every kind, and to avoid, if possible, any accasion of returning to this place of con-' I think,' faid Adams, ' the advice of a month's retirement and reflect tion was very proper; but I should rather have expected it from a divine than a fur-The gentleman smiled at Adams's. fimplicity, and without explaining himfelf farther on fuch an odious subject, went on thus: I was no fooner perfectly restored to health, than I found my passion for women, which I was afraid to fatisfy as I had done. made me very uneafy; I determined therefore to keep a mittrefs. Nor was I long before I fixed my choice on a young woman, who had before been kept by two gentlemes and to whom I was recommended by a celebrated bawd. I took her home to my chambers, and made her a fettlement during cohabitation. This perhaps would have been very ill paid; however, she did not faffer me to be perplexed on that account: for before quarter-day, I found her at my chambers in too familiar conversation with a young fellow who was dressed like an officer. but was indeed a city-apprentice. Instead of excusing her inconstancy, she rapped out half a dozen of oaths, and mapping her fingers at me, fwore the scorned to confine herself to the hest man in England. Upon this we parted, and the fame bawd prefently provided her another keeper. I was not fo much concerned at our separation, as I found within a day or two I had reason to be for our meeting: for I was obliged to pay a second visit to my furgeon. I was now forced to do penance for some weeks, during which time I contracted an acquaintance with a beautiful young girl, the daughter of a gentleman, who, after having been forty years in the army, and in all the campaigns under the Duke of Marlborough, died a lieutenant on half pay; and had left a widow with this only child, in very distressed circumstances: they had only a fmall penfion from the government, with what little the daughter could add to it by her work; for fac hand great excellence at her needle. This girl was, at my first acquaintance with her, folicited in marriage by a young fellow in good circumstances. He was apprentice to a linen-draper, and had a little fortune fufficient to fet up his trade. The mother was great-Ly pleased with this match, as indeed she had fufficient reason. However, I soon prevented it. I represented him in fo low a fight to his mistress, and made so good an use of flattery, promises, and presents, that, not to dwell longer on this subject than is necessary, I prevailed with the poor girl, and conveyed her away from her mother! In a word, I debauched her --- (At which words Adams Rarted up, fetched three frides acrofs the room, and then replaced himself in his chair.) You are not more affected with this part of my story than myself: I assure you it will never be fufficiently repented of in my own opinion; but if you already detest it, how much more will your indignation be raised when you hear the fatal consequences of this barbarous, this villainous action! If you please, therefore, I will here defift- By no means, cries Adams, go on, I beseech you; and Heaven grant you may fincerely repent of this and many o-

JOSEPH ANDREWS.

<sup>2</sup> JOSEPH ANDREW'S.

continued the gentleman, as happy as the possession of a fine young creature, who had a good education, and was endued with many agreeable qualities, could make me. We lived some months with vast fondness together, without any company or conversation more than we found in one another: but this could not continue always; and though I still preserved a great affection for her, I began more and more to want the relief of other company, and confequently to leave her by degrees, at last whole days to herself. She failed not to testify some uneasiness on these occasions, and complained of the melancholy life she led; to remedy which, I introduced her into the acquaintance of some other kept mistresses, with whom she used to play at cards, and frequent plays and other diversions. She had not lived long in this intimacy, before I perceived a visible alteration in her behaviour; all her modelty and innocence vanished by degrees, till her mind became thoroughly taint-She affected the company of rakes, gave herself all manner of airs, was never easy but abroad, or when she had a party at my She was rapacious of money, extravagant to excess, loose in her conversation; and if ever I demurred to any of her demands, oaths, tears, and fits, were the ini-Vol. II.

10

mediate consequences. As the first raptures of fondness were long since over, this behaviour foon estranged my affections from her: I began to reflect with pleasure that she was not my wife, and to conceive an intention of parting with her; of which having given her a hint, she took care to prevent me the pains of turning her out of doors, and accordingly departed herself, having first broke open my escrutore, and taken with her all she could find, to the amount of about L. 200. the first heat of my resentment, I resolved to pursue her with all the vengeance of the law; but as she had the good luck to escape me during that ferment, my passion afterwards cooled: and having reflected that I had been the first aggressor, and had done her an injury, for which I could make her no reparation, by robbing her of the innocence of her mind, and hearing at the same time that the poor old woman her mother had broke her heart on the daughter's elopement from her, I, concluding myfelf her murderer, (' As you very well might,' cries Adams with a groan;) was pleased, that God Almighty had taken this method of punishing me, and resolved quietly to submit to the Indeed I could wish I had never heard more of the poor creature, who became in the end an abandoned profligate; and after being some years a common prostitute, at last ended her miferable life in Newgate. (Here the gentleman fetched a deep figh, which Mr Adams echoed very loudly; and both continued filent, looking at each other for fome minutes. At last the gentleman proceeded thus:) I had been perfectly conflant to this girl during the whole time I kept her: but she had scarce departed before I discovered more marks of her infidelity to me than the loss of my money. In short, I was forced to make a third vifit to my furgeon, out of whose hands I did not get a hasty discharge.

I now forfwore all future dealings with the fex, complained loudly that the pleafure did not compensate the pain, and railed at the beautiful creatures, in as gross language as Iuvenal himfelf formerly reviled them in. I looked on all the town-harlots with a detestation not easy to be conceived; their perfons appeared to me as painted palaces, inhabited by difease and death; nor could their beauty make them more defirable objects in my eyes, than gilding could make me covet a pill, or golden plates a coffin. though I was no longer the absolute slave, I found some reasons to own myself still the fubject of love. My hatred for women decreafed daily; and I am not positive but time might have betrayed me again to some common harlot, had I not been fecured by a passion for the charming Sapphira, which having once entered upon, made a violent progress in my heart. Sapphira was wife to a man of fashion and gallantry, and one who feemed, I own, every way worthy of her affections, which however he had not the reputation of having. She was indeed a coquette achevée. ' Pray, Sir,' fays Adams, what is a coquette? I have met with the word in French authors, but never could ' affign any idea to it. I believe it is the ' fame with une fotte, anglice, a fool.' Sir, answered the gentleman, perhaps you are not much mistaken; but as it is a particular kind of felly, I will endeavour to describe it. Were all creatures to be ranked in the order of creation, according to their usefulness, I know few animals that would not take place of a coquette; nor indeed hath this creature much pretence to any thing beyond instinct: for though fometimes we might imagine it was animated by the passion of vanity, yet far the greater part of its actions fall beneath even that low motive; for instance, several absurd gestures and tricks, infinitely more foolish than what can be obferved in the most ridiculous birds and beasts, and which would perfuade the beholder, that the filly wretch was aiming at our contempt. Indeed its characteristic is affectation. and this led and governed by whim only: for as beauty, wifdom, wit, good-nature, politeness, and health, are fometimes affected by this creature; fo are ugliness, folly, nonfense, ill-nature, ill breeding and sickness, likewise put on by it in their turn. Its life is one constant lie; and the only rule by which you can form any judgment of them is that they are never what they feem. If it was possible for a coquette to love (as it is not, for if ever it attains this passion, the coquette ceases instantly) it would wear the face of indifference, if not of hatred, to the beloved object; you may therefore be affured, when they endeavour to perfuade you of their likeing, that they are indifferent to you at leaft. And indeed this was the case of my Sapphira. who no fooner faw me in the number of her admirers, than she gave me what is commonly called encouragement; the would often look at me, and, when the perceived me meet her eyes, would instantly take them off, discovering at the same time as much surprise and emotion as possible. These arts failed not of the fuccess she intended; and as I grew more particular to her than the rest of her admirers, she advanced in proportion, more directly to me than to the others.

JOSEPH ANDREWS.

fected the low voice, whifper, lifp, figh, flast, laugh, and many other indications of pasfion, which daily deceive thousands. When I played at whith with her, the would look earnestly at me, and at the fame time lose deal or revoke; then burst into a ridiculous laugh, and cry, 'La! I can't imagine what I was thinking of.' To detain you no longer, after I had gone thro' a sufficient course of gallantry, as I thought, and was thoroughly convinced I had raifed a violent passion in my mistress; I sought an opportunity of coming to an eclairciffement with here. She avoided this as much as possible; however, great asfiduity at length presented me one. not describe all the particulars of this interview; let it fuffice, that till she could no longer pretend not to fee my drift, she first affected a violent surprise, and immediately after as violent a passion: she wondered what I had feen in her conduct, which could induce me to affront her in this manner: and breaking from me the first moment she could, told me, I had no other way to escape the consequence of her resentment, than by never feeing, or at least speaking to her more. I was not contented with this answer; I still purfued her, but to no purpose, and was at length convinced that her husband had the fole possession of her person, and that neither he nor any other had made any impression on her heart. I was taken off from following this ignis fatuus by some advances which were made me by the wife of a citizen, who, though neither very young nor handsome, was yet too agreeable to be rejected by my amorous constitution. I accordingly soon satisfied her, that she had not cast away her hints on a barren or cold foil: on the contrary, they instantly produced her an eager and defiring lover. Nor did she give me any reason to complain: she met the warmth she had raised, with equal ardour. no longer a coquette to deal with, but one who was wifer than to profitute the noble passion of love to the ridiculous lust of vanity. We prefently understood one another, and as the pleasures we fought lay in a mutual gratification, we foon found and enjoyed them. I thought myself at first greatly happy in the possession of this new mistress, whose fondness would have quickly surfeited a more fickly appetite; but it had a different effect on mine; the carried my passion higher by it than youth or beauty had been able: but my happiness could not long continue uninterrupted. The apprehensions we lay under from the jealoufy of her husband, gave us great uneafiness. 'Poor wretch! I pity, him,' cried Adams. He did indeed de-ferve it, faid the gentleman; for he loved his wife with great tenderness; and I assure you it is a great satisfaction to me that I was not the man who first seduced her affections from him. These apprehensions appeared alfo too well-grounded: for in the end he discovered us, and procured witnesses of our careffes. He then profecuted me at law. and recovered 2000l. damages, which much diffressed my fortune to pay: and what was worse, his wife being devorced came upon my hands. I led a very uneasy life with her; for belides that my passion was now much abated, her excessive jealousy was very troublesome. At length death rid me of an inconvenience, which the confideration of my having been the author of her misfortuneswould never fuffer me to take any other method of discarding.

I now bade adien to love, and refolved to pursue other less dangerous and expensive pleasures. I fell into the acquaintance of a set of jolly companions, who slept all day, and drank all night: fellows who might rather be said to consume time than to live. Their best conversation was nothing but noise: singing, hallowing, wrangling, drinking, toasting, sp—wing, smoaking, were the chief ingredients of our entertainment. And yet, bad as they were, they were more tolerable than our graver scenes, which were either excessive tedious narratives of dull common matters of fact, or hot disputes about trifling matters, which commonly ended in a wager. way of life the first serious reflection put a period to; and I became member of a club frequented by young men of great abilities. The bottle was now only called in to the affistance of our conversation, which rolled on the deepest points of philosophy. These gentlemen were engaged in a fearch after truth, in the pursuit of which they threw aside all the prejudices of education, and governed themselves only by the infallible guide of human reason. This great guide, after having fhewn them the falsehood of that very ancient, but fimple tenet, that there is fuch a being as a Deity in the universe, helped them to establish in his stead, a certain rule of right, by adhering to which they all arrived at the utmost purity of morals. Reflection made me as much delighted with this fociety, as it had taught me to despise and detest the former. I began now to esteem myself a being of a higher order than I had ever before conceived, and was the more charmed with this rule of right, as I really found in my own nature nothing repugnant to it. I held in utter contempt all persons who wanted any other inducement to virtue besides her intrin-fic beauty and excellence; and had fo high an opinion of my present companions, with regard to their morality, that I would have trusted them with whatever was nearest and Whilft I was engaged in this dearest to me. delightful dream, two or three accidents happened fuccessively, which at first much surprifed me. For, one of our greatest philosophers, or rule of right-men, withdrew himself from us, taking with him the wife of one of his most intimate friends. Secondly, another of the fame fociety left the club without remembering to take leave of his bail. A third having borrowed a fum of money of me, for which I received no fecurity, when I asked him to repay it, absolutely denied the loan. feveral practices, fo inconfistent with our golden rule, made me begin to fuspect its infallibility; but when I communicated my thoughts to one of the club, he faid, There was nothing absolutely good or evil in itself; that actions were denominated good or bad by the circumitances of the agent. That possibly the man who ran away with his neighbour's wife, might be one of very good inclinations, but . over-prevailed on by the violence of an unruly passion, and in other particulars, might be a very worthy member of fociety: that if the beauty of any woman created in him an uneafiness, he had a right from nature to relieve himself; with many other things, which I then detested so much, that I took leave of the fociety that very evening, and never returned to it again. Being now reduced to a state of folitude which I did not like, I became a great frequenter of the play-houses, which indeed was always my favourite diversion, and most evenings passed away two or three hours behind the scenes, where I met with feveral poets, with whom I made engagements at the taverns. Some of the players were likewise of our parties. meetings we were generally entertained by the poets with reading their performances, and by the players with repeating their parts: upon which occasions, I observed the gentleman who furnished our entertainment. was commonly the best pleased of the company; who, though they were pretty civil to him to his face, feldom failed to take the first opportunity of his absence to ridicule him. Now I made some remarks, which probably are too obvious to be worth relating. 'Sir,' fays Adams, 'your remarks, if you please.' First then, says he, I concluded that the general observation, that wits are most inclined to vanity, is not true. Men are equally vain of riches, strength, beauty, honours, &c. But these appear of themselves to the eyes of the beholders, whereas the poor wit is obliged to produce his performance, to shew you his perfection: and on his readiness to do this, that vulgar opinion I have before-mentioned is grounded: but doth not the person who expends vast sums in the furniture of his house. or the ornaments of his person, who consumes much time, and employs great pains in dreffing himself, or who thinks himself paid for felf-denial, labour, or even villainy, by a title or a ribbon, facrifice as much to vanity, as the poor wit, who is defirous to read you his poem or his play? My fecond remark was, that vanity is the work of passions, and more apt to contaminate the mind than any other: for as felfishness is much more general than we please to allow it, so it is natural to hate and envy those who stand between us and the good we defire. Now, in lust and ambition these are few; and even in avarice we find many who are no obstacles to our pursuits: but the vain man feeks pre-eminence; and every thing which is excellent or praise-worthy in another, renders him the mark of his antipathy. Adams now began to fumble in his pockets, and foon cried out, 'O la! I ' have it not about me.'- Upon this the gentleman asked him what he was searching for; he faid, he fearched after a fermon, which he thought his master-piece, against vanity. ' Fy upon it, fy upon it,' cries he, ' why do

* I ever leave that fermon out of my pocket? I wish it was within five miles: I would willingly fetch it, to read it to you.' The gentleman answered, that there was no need, for he was cured of the paffion. ' And for that very reason, on the Adams, I would read it, for I am confident you would ad-" mire it. Indeed I have never been a greater enemy to any passion than that filly one of vanity. The gentleman smiled, and proceeded --- From this fociety I eafily passed to that of the gamesters, where nothing remarkable happened, but the finishing my fortune, which those gentlemen soon helped me to the end of. This opened scenes of life his therto unknown; poverty and distress, with their horrid train of duns, attorneys, bailiffs, haunted me day and night. My clothes grew Thabby, my credit bad, my friends and acquaintance of all kinds cold. In this fituation, the strangest thought imaginable came into my head; and what was this, but to write a play? for I had fufficient leisure : fear of bailiffs confined me every day to my room; and having always had a little inclination, and fomething of a genius that way, I fet myself to work, and within a few months produced a piece of five acts, which was accepted of at the theatre. I remembered to have formerly taken tickets Vol. II.

of other poets for their benefits, long before the appearance of their performances; and refolving to follow a precedent which was fo well fuited to my present circumstances, I immediately provided myself with a large number of little papers. Happy indeed would be the state of peetry, would these tickets pass current at the bakehouse, the alehouse, and the chandler's shop; but alas! far otherwife: no tailor will take them in payment for buckram, canvas, flay-tape; nor no bailiff for civility-money. They are indeed no more than a passport to beg with, a certificate that the owner wants five shillings, which induces well-disposed Christians to charity. I now experienced what is worse than poverty. or rather what is the worst consequence of poverty: I mean attendance and dependence Many a morning have I waiton the great. ed hours in the cold parlours of men of quality, where, after feeing the lowest rascals in lace and embroidery, the pimps and buffoons in fashion admitted, I have been sometimes told, on fending in my name, that my Lord could not possibly see me this morning: a fufficient affurance that I fhould never more get entrance into that house. Sometimes I have been at last admitted; and the great man hath thought proper to excuse himself, by telling me he was tied up. ' Tied " up,' faid Adams, ' pray what's that?' Sir, fays the gentleman, the profit which bookfellers allowed authors for the best works: was fo very fmall, that certain men of birth and fortune fome years ago, who were the patrons of wit and learning, thought fit to encourage them farther, by entering into vofuntary subscriptions for their encouragement. Thus Prior, Rowe, Pope, and some other men of genius, received large fems for their labours from the public. This feemed foreafy a method of getting money; that many of the lowest scribblers of the times ventured to publish their works in the same way; and; many had the affurance to take in subscriptions for what was not writ, non-ever intended. Subscriptions in this manner growing infinite, and a kind of tax on the public to some persons finding it not so easy a talk to: differn good from bad authors, or to know: what genius was worthy encouragement, and what was not, to prevent the expence of subscribing to so many, invented a method; to excuse themselves from all subscriptions: whatever; and this was to receive a small. fum of money in confideration of giving an large one if ever they subscribed; which: many have done, and many more have pretended to have done, in order to filence all. folicitation. The fame method was likewife taken with playhouse tickets, which were no less a public grievance; and this is what they call being tied up from subscribing. 'I can't, fay but the team is apt enough, and fomewhat typical,' faid Adams: ' for a man of large fortune, who ties himself up, as your call it, from the encouragement of men of merit, ought to be tied up in reality." Well, Sir, says the gentleman, to return to: Sometimes I have received as my story. guinea from a man of quality, given with as. ill a grace as alms are generally to the meanest beggar, and purchased too with as much time spent in attendance, as, if it had been spent in honest industry, might have broughtme more profit with infinitely more fatisfac-After about two months spent in this. difagreeable way with the utmost mortification, when I was pluming my hopes on the prospect of a plentiful harvest from my play, upon applying to the prompter to knowwhen it came into rehearfal, he informed me. he had received orders from the managers to return me the play again; for that they. could not possibly act it that season; but if I would take it and revise it against the next, they would be glad to fee it again. I fnatch'd it from him with great indignation, and retired to my room, where I threw myfelf on the bed in a fit of despair- You should:

rather have thrown yourfelf on your knees, fays Adams: ' for despair is finful.' Asfoon, continued the gentleman, as I had indulged the first tumult of my passion, I began to confider coully what course I should take, in a fituation without friends, money, credit. or reputation of any kind. After revolving many things in my mind, I could fee no other possibility of furnishing myself with the miferable necessaries of life than to retire; to a garret near the Temple, and commence" hackney-writer to the lawyers; for which I was well qualified, being an excellent pen-This purpose I resolved on, and imstediately put it in execution. I had and acquaintance with an attorney who had formerly transacted affairs for me, and to him-I applied: but instead of fuenishing me with. any business, he laughed at my undertaking, and told me. He was afraid I should turn his deeds into plays, and he should expect to see them on the stage. Not to tire you with instances of this kind from others, I found that Plato himself did not hold poets in greater abhorrence than these men of business doc: Whenever I durst venture to a coffeehouse. which was on Sundays only, a whisper ranround the room, which was confantly attended with 'a sheer-That's Poer Wilson >: for I know not whether you have observed:

it, but there is a malignity in the nature of man, which, when not weeded out, or at least covered by a good education and politer ness, delights in making another uneasy or diffatisfied with himself. This abundantly appears in all affemblies, except those which are filled by people of fashion, and especially, among the younger people of both fexes, whose births and fortunes place them just without the polite circles: I mean the lowerclass of the gentry, and the higher of the mercantile world, who are, in reality, the worst bred part of mankind. Well, Sir, whilst I continued in this miserable state, with scarce sufficient business, to keep me from flarving, the reputation of a poet being my bane, I accidentally became acquainted with a bookfeller, who told me, It was a pity a man of my learning and genius should be obliged to fuch a method of getting his livelihood: that he had a compassion for me, and if I would engage with him, he would undertake to provide handsomely for me. A. man in my circumstances, as he very well knew had no choice. I accordingly accepted his proposal with his conditions, which were none of the most favourable, and fell to translating with all my might. I had no longer reason to lament the want of business for he furnished me with so much, that in

JOSEPH ANDREWS.

Half a-vear I almost writ myself blind. I Ekewise contracted a distemper by my sedentary life, in which no part of my body was exercifed but my right arm, which rendered use incapable of writing for a long time. This unluckily happened to delay the publication of a work, and my last performance: not having fold well, the bookfeller declined any further engagement, and aspersed. me to his brethren as a careless idle fellow. I had, however, by having half-worked and half-flarved myself to death, during the time I was in his fervice, faved a few guineas, with which I bought a lottery ticket, resolving to throw myself into-Fortune's lap, and try if the would make me amends for the injuries she had done me: at the gaming-table. This purchase being made, left me almost pennyless; when, as if I had not been fufficiently miferable, a bair liff in woman's cloaths got admittance to my: chamber, whither he was directed by thebooksellen. He arrested me at my tailor's fuit for thirty-five pounds; a fum for which I could not procure bail, and was therefore. conveyed to his boufe, where I was locked. up in an upper chamber. I had now neitherhealth (for I was scarce recovered from my indisposition) liberty, money, or friends; and had abandoned all hopes, and even the defire of life. But this could not last long," faid Adams: for doubtless the tailor ree leafed you the moment he was truly ace quainted with your affairs, and knew that vour circumstances would not permit you. to pay him.' Oh, Sir, answered the gentleman, he knew that before he arrested me: nay, he knew that nothing but incapacity: could prevent me paying my debts; for I: had been his customer many years, had spent: wait furns of money with him, and had always paid most punctually in my prosperous days; but when I reminded him of this, with: affurances, that, if he would not molest my endeavours, I would pay him all the money! L could by my utmost labour and industry procure, referving only what was fufficient. to preserve me alive; he answered, his patience was worn out; that I had put him off from time to time; that he wanted the money; that he had put it into a lawyer's. hands; and if I did not pay him immediateby; or find fecurity, I must by in goal, and expect no mercy. "He may expect mercy;" cries Adams, starting from his chair, ' where. he will find none. How can fuch a wretch repeat the Lord's prayer, where the word, which is translated, I know not for what! " reason, Trespusses, is in the original Debts? and as furely as we do not forgive others.

their debts when they are unable to pay them; fo furely shall we ourselves be anforgiven, when we are in no condition of proceeded. While I was in this deplorable fituation, a former acquaintance, to whom I had communicated my lottery-ticket, found me out, and, making me a vifit, with great delight in his countenance, shook me heartily by the hand, and wished me joy of my good fortune: 'For,' fays he, ' your ticket is come up a prize of 3000 L' Adams fnapt his fingers at these words in an ecstaly, of joy; which, however, did not continue long: for the gentleman thus proceeded, Alas! Sir, this was only a trick of fortune to fink me the deeper: for I had disposed of this lottery-ticket two days before to a relation, who refused lending me a shilling without it, in order to procure myself bread. As, foon as my friend was acquainted with my unfortunate sale, he began to revile me, and remind me of the ill conduct and miscarriages of my life. He faid, 'I was one whom. fortune could not fave, if the would; that I was now ruined beyond any hopes of retrieval, nor must expect any pity from my friends: that it would be extreme weakness, to compassionate the misfortunes of a man who ran headlong to his own destruction."

He then painted to me, in as lively colours as he was able, the happiness I should have now enjoyed, had I not foolishly disposed of my ticket. I urged the plea of necessity; but he made no answer to that, and began again to revile me, till I could bear it no longer, and defired him to finish his visit. foon exchanged the bailiff's house for a prifon: where, as I had not money fufficient to procure me a separate apartment, I was crowded in with a great number of miserable wretches, in common with whom I was deflitute of every convenience of life, even that which all the brutes enjoy, wholesome air. In these dreadful circumstances I applied by letter to feveral of my old acquaintance, and such to whom I had formerly lent money without any great prospect of its being returned, for their assistance; but in vain. An excuse instead of a denial was the gentlest anfwer I received. - Whilft I languished in a condition too horrible to be described, and which in a land of humanity, and what is much more, Christianity, seems a strange punishment for a little inadvertency and indiscretion; whilst I was in this condition, a fellow came into the prison, and enquiring me out, delivered me the following letter:

. "SIR,

"My father, to whom you fold your ticket
"in the last lottery, died the same day in "which it came up a prize, as you have poss fibly heard, and lest me sole heiress of all "his fortune. I am so much touched with "your present circumstances, and the un"easiness you must feel at having been driven to dispose of what might have made you
"happy, that I must desire your acceptance of the inclosed, and am,

"Your humble fervant,

" HARRIET HEARTY."

And what do you think was inclosed? 'I don't know,' cried Adams; 'Not less than a guinea, I hope.' Sir, it was a bank'note for L. 200. 'L. 200!' cried Adams, in a rapture. No less I assure you, answered the gentleman; a sum I was not half so delighted with, as with the dear name of the generous girl that sent it me; and who was not only the best, but the handsomest creature in the universe; and for whom I had long had a passion, which I never durst disclose to her. I kissed her name a thousand times, my eyes overslowing with tenderness and gratitude, I repeated—But not to detain you with these raptures. I immediately acquired my liberty, and having paid all my debts, departed, with upwards of fifty pounds in my pocket, to thank my kind deliverer. She happened to be then out of town, a circumstance which, upon reflection, pleased me: for by that means I had an opportunity to appear before her in a more decent drefs. At her return to town within a day or two. I threw myself at her feet with the most ardent acknowledgments, which she rejected with an unfeigned greatness of mind, and told me, I could not oblige her more than by never mentioning, or, if possible, thinking on a circumstance which must bring to my mind an accident that might be grievous to me to think on. She proceeded thus: What I have done is in my own eyes a trifle, and perhaps infinitely less than would have become me to do. And if you think of engaging in any business, where a lare ger fum may be ferviceable to you, I shall onot be over rigid, either as to the fecurity or interest.' I endeavoured to express all the gratitude in my power to this profusion of goodness, though perhaps it was my enemy, and began to afflict my mind with more agonies than all the miseries I had underwent: it affected me with feverer reflections than poverty, diffress, and prisons united, had been able to make me feel: for, Sir, these acts and professions of kindness, which were fufficient to have raised in a good heart the most violent passion of friendship to one of the same, or to age and ugliness in a different fex, came to me from a woman, a young and beautiful woman, one whose perfections I had long known, and for whom I had long conceived a violent passion, though with a despair, which made me endeavour rather to curb and conceal, than to nourith or acquaint her with it. In fhort, they came upon me united with beauty, fostness, and tenderness, such bewitching smiles-O, Mr Adams, in that moment I lost myself, and forgetting our different fituations, nor confidering what return I was making to her goodmess, by desiring her, who had given me so much, to bestow her all, I laid gently hold on her hand, and conveying it to my lips, I preffed it with inconceivable ardour; then, lifting up my fwimming eyes, I faw her face and neck overforead with one blush; she offered to withdraw her hand, yet not so as to deliver it from mine, though I held it with the gentlest force. We both stood trembling, her eyes cast on the ground, and mine stedfastly fixed on her. Good God, what was then the condition of my foul! burning with love, d.fire, admiration, gratitude, and every tender passion, all bent on one charming object. Vol. II.

Passion at last got the better of both reason and respect, and softly letting go her hand, I offered madly to class her in my arms: when a little recovering herself, she started from me, asking me, with some shew of anger, if the had any reason to expect this treatment from me. I then fell prostrate before her, and told her, if I had offended, my life was absolutely in her power, which I would in any manner lose for her sake. Nav. · Madam,' faid I, ' you shall not be so ready to punish me as I to suffer. I own my guilt. I detest the reflection that I would have facrificed your happiness to mine. Believe me, I fincerely repent my ingrati-* tude; yet believe me too, it was my passion, my unbounded passion for you, which hurried me fo far: I have loved you long and * tenderly; and the goodness you have shewn * me hath innocently weighed down a wretch undone before. Acquit me of all mean, ' mercenary views; and before I take my ' leave of you for ever, which I am resolved instantly to do, believe me, that fortune could have raised me to no height, to which ' I would not have gladly lifted you. curst be fortune!' 'Do not,' fays she, interrupting me with the sweetest voice, ' do " not curse fortune, since she hath made me happy; and if she hath put your happiness in my power, I have told you, you fhall ask nothing in reason which I will refuse.' 'Madam,' said I, 'you mistake • me, if you imagine, as you feem, my hap-* piness is in the power of fortune now. You · have obliged me too much already; if I * have any with, it is for some blest accident by which I may contribute with my life to · the least augmentation of your felicity. As for myself, the only happiness I can ever · have, will be hearing of yours; and if fortune · would make that complete, I will forgive · her all her wrongs to me.' · You may indeed,' answered she, similing, ' for your own happinels must be included in mine. · long known your worth; nay, I must con-* fefs,' faid the blushing, . I have long difcovered that pallion for me you profess, notwithstanding those endeavours which I am convinced were unaffected, to concealit: and if all I can give with reason will not suffice,---take reason away,---and now I believe you cannot ask me what I will deny.'-- She uttered these words with a sweetness not to be imagined. I immediately started; my blood which lay freezing at my heart, rushed tumultuously through every vein. Rood for a moment filent; then flying to her, I caught her in my arms, no longer refilting, -and foftly told her, she must give me then herself. O Sir, --- can I describe her look? She remained filent, and almost motionless, feveral minutes. At last, recovering herself a little, the infifted on my leaving her, and in fuch a manner, that I instantly obeyed: you may imagine, however, I foon faw her again .- But I alk pardon, I fear I have detained you too long in relating the particulars of the former interview. 'So far otherwise:' faid Adams, licking his lips, 'that I could ' willingly hear it over again.' Well, Sir, continued the gentleman, to be as concise as possible, within a week she consented to make me the happiest of mankind. We were married thortly after; and when I came to examine the circumstances of my wife's fortune, (which I do affure you I was not prefently at leifure enough to do) I found it amounted to about fix thousand pounds, most part of which lay in effects; for her father had been a winemerchant, and the feemed willing, if'I liked it, that I should carry on the same trade. I readily, and too inconfiderately, undertook it: for, not having been bred up to the focrets of the bufiness, and endeavouring to deal with the utmost honesty and uprightness, I foon found our fortune in a declining way, and my trade decreasing by little and little: for my wines, which I never adulterated after their importation, and were fold as neat as they came over, were univerfally decried by the vintners, to whom I could not allow them quite as cheap as those who gained double the profit by a less price. I soon began to defpair of improving our fortune by these means; nor was I at all easy at the vifits and familiarity of many who had beenmy acquaintance in my prosperity, but denied and shunned me in my adversity, and now very forwardly renewed their acquaintance with me. In short, I had sufficiently seen, that the pleasures of the world are chiefly folly, and the business of it mostly knavery; and both, nothing better than vanity: the men of pleafure tearing one another to pieces, from the emulation of fpending money, and the men of bufiness, from envy in getting it. My happiness consisted entirely in my wife, whom I loved with an inexpressible fondness, which was perfectly returned; and my prospects were no other than to provide for our growing family; for the was now big of herfecond child: I therefore took an opportunity to ask her opinion of entering into a retired life, which, after hearing my reasons, and perceiving my affection for it, the readily embraced. We foon put our small fortune, now reduced under three thousand pounds, intomoney, with part of which we purchased this. little place, whither we retired foon after her-G. 3.

delivery, from a world full of buffle, noise; hatred, envy and ingratitude, to eafe, quiet, We have here lived almost twenty years, with little other conversation than our own, most of the neighbourhood taking us for very strange people; the Squire of the parish representing me as a madman, and the Parson as a presbyterian; because I will not hunt with the one, nor drink with the other: Sir,' fays Adams, 'Fortune hath, I think, paid you all her debts in this sweet retirement.' Sir, replied the gentleman, I am thankful to the great Author of all things for the bleffings I here enjoy. I have the best of wives, and three pretty children, for whom I have the true tenderness of a parent; but no bleffings are pure in this world. three years after my arrival here I loft my eldest son. (Here he sighed bitterly.) 'Sir,' fays Adams, ' we must submit to Providence, and confider death is common to all.' We must submit, indeed, answered the gentleman; and if he had died, I could have borne the lofs with patience; but alas! Sir, he was Rolen away from my door by some wicked travelling people whom they call Gipfies: nor could I ever with the most diligent search recover him. Poor child! he had the sweetest look, the exact picture of his mother; at which some tears unwittingly dropped from his eyes, as did likewife from those of Adams.

who always fympathifed with his friends on those occasions. Thus, Sir, said the gentleman, I have finished my story, in which, if I have been too particular, I ask your pardon; and now, if you please, I will setch you another bottle; which proposal the parson thankfully accepted.

C H A P. IV.

A description of Mr Wilson's way of living. The tragical adventure of the dog, and other grave matters.

HE gentleman returned with the bottle; and Adams and he fate fome time filent, when the former started up. and cried, 'No, that won't do.' The gentleman enquired into his meaning; he answered. He had been confidering that it was posfible the late famous King Theodore might have been that very fon whom he had loft: but added, that his age could not answer that imagination. However, fays he, God disposes all things for the best, and very probably he may be fome great man, or duke, and may, one day or other, revisit you in that capacity. The gentleman answered, he should know him among ten thousand; for he had a mark on his left breast of a strawberry, which his mother had given him by longing for that fruit.

That beautiful young lady, the Morning. now rose from her bed, and with a countenance blooming with fresh youth and sprightliness, like Miss S --- h *, with fost dews hanging on her pouting lips, began to take her early walk over the eastern hills; and prefently after, that gallant person the Sun stole foftly from his wife's chamber to pay his addresses to her; when the gentleman asked his guest if he would walk forth and furvey his little garden, which he readily agreed to, and Joseph at the same time awaking from a fleep in which he had been two hours buried, went with them. No parterres, no fountains, no statues, embellished this little garden. Its only ornament was a short walk, shaded on each side by a silbert-hedge, with a small alcove at one end, whither in. hot weather the gentleman and his wife used to retire and divert themselves with their children, who played in the walk before them. But though vanity had no votary in this little spot, here was variety of fruit, and every thing useful for the kitchen, which was abundantly fufficient to catch the admiration of Adams, who told the gentleman he had certainly a good gardener. Sir, answeredhe, that gardener is now before you; whatever you fee here, is the work folely of my own hands. Whilft I am providing necesfaries for my table, I likewise procure myself an appetite for them. In fair feafons, I feldom pass less than fix hours of the twentyfour in this place, where I am not idle; and by these means I have been able to preserve my health ever fince my arrival here without affiftance from physic. Hither I generally repair at the dawn, and exercises myself, whilst my wife dresses her children, and prepares our breakfast: after which we are seldom afunder during the relidue of the day; for when the weather will not permit them to accompany me here, I am usually within with them: for I am neither ashamed of converfing with my wife, nor of playing with my children: to fay the truth, I do not perceive that inferiority of understanding, which the levity of rakes, the dulness of men of bufiness, or the austerity of the learned would persuade us of in women. As for my woman, I declare I have found none of my own fex capable of making juster observations on life, or of delivering them more agreeably; nor do I believe any one possessed of a faithfuller or braver friend. And fure as this friendship is sweetened with more delicacy and tenderness, so it is confirmed by dearer pledges than can attend the closest male alliance: for what union can be so fast, as our common interest in the fruits of our embraces? Perhaps, Sir, you are not yourself a father; if you are not, be assured you cannot conceive the delight I have in my little ones. Would you not despise me, if you saw me street on the ground, and my children playing round me? 'I should reverence the fight,' quoth Adams, 'I myfelf am now the father of fir. and have been of eleven, and I can fay I e never scourged a child of my own, unlessas his fchoolmaster, and then have felt every stroke on my own posteriors. And ' as to what you fay concerning women, I · have often lamented my own wife did not " understand Greek.'-The gentleman smiled, and answered, he would not be apprehended to infinuate that his own had an understanding above the care of her family; on the contrary, says he, my Harriet, I assure vou, is a notable housewife, and few gentlemen's house-keepers understand cookery and confectionary better; but these are arts which the hath no great occasion for now: however, the wine you commended fo much last night at supper, was of her own making, as is indeed all the liquor in my house, except my beer, which falls to my province. ( And 4 I affure you it is as excellent,' quoth Adams, sas ever I talted.') We formerly kept a maid-fervant, but fince my girls have been growing up, she is unwilling to indulge them. in idleness; for as the fortunes I shall give them will be very fmall, we intend not to breed them above the rank they are likely to fill hereafter, nor teach them to despite, or ruin a plain husband. Indeed I could wish a m: n of my own temper, and a retired life, might fall to their lot: for I have experienced that calm ferene happiness which is seated in content, is inconfistent with the hurry and bustle of the world. He was proceeding thus, when the little things, being just rifen, ran eagerly towards him, and asked him blessing : they were shy to the strangers; but the eldest acquainted her father, that her mother and the young gentlewoman were up, and that breakfast was ready. They all went in, where the gentleman was furtrifed at the beauty of Fanny, who had now recovered herfelf from her fatigue, and was entirely clean dressed; for the rogues who had taken away her purse, had left her her bundle. But if he was to much amazed at the beauty of this young creature, his guests were no less charmed at the tenderness which appeared in the behaviour of the husband and wife to each other. and to their children, and at the dutiful and affectionate behaviour of these to their pa-These instances pleased the well-posed mind of Adams equally with the readiness which they expressed to oblige their guelts, and their forwardness to offer them the best of every thing in their house; and what delighted him still more, was an instance or two of their charity; for while they were at breakfast, the good woman was called forth to affift her fick neighbour, which fhe did with fome cordials made for the public use; and the good man went into his garden at the same time, to supply another with fomething which he wanted thence; for they had nothing which those who wanted it were not welcome to. These good people were in the utmost chearfulness, when they heard the report of a gun; and immediately afterwards a little dog, the favourite of the eldest daughter, came limping in all bloody, and laid himself at his mistress's feet: the poor girl, who was about eleven years old, burst into tears at the fight; and presently one of the neighbours came in and informed them, that the young squire, the son of the lord of the manor, had shot him as he past by, swearing at the fame time he would profecute the master of him for keeping a spaniel; for that he had given notice, he would not fuffer one in the parish. The dog, whom his mistress had taken into her lap, died in a few minutes, licking her hand. She express'd great agony at his loft; and the other children began to cry for their filter's misfortune, nor could Fanny herself refrain. Whilft the father and mother attempted to comfort her. Adams grafped his crabitick, and would have falfied out after the funire, had not loseph with-held him. He could not however, bridle his tongue-He pronounced the word Rascal with great emphasis; said, he deserved to be hanged more than a highwayman, and wished he had the scourging him. The mother took the bild, lamenting and carrying the dead favourite in her arms, out of the room, when the gentleman faid, this was the second time this squire had endeavoured to kill the little wretch, and had wounded him fmartly once before; adding, he could have no motive but ill-nature; for the little thing, which was not near as big as one's fift, had hever been twenty yards from the house in the fix years his daughter had had it. faid he had done nothing to deserve this ulage, but his father had too great a for-'tune to contend with: that he was as abso-Inte as any tyrant in the universe, and had killed all the dogs, and taken away all the guns in the neighbourhood; and not only that but he trampled down hedges, and rode over corn and gardens, with no more regard than if they were the highway. ' I wish I Vol. II.

Whoever the reader pleafes.

H

' could catch him in my garden,' faid Adams,

though I would rather forgive him riding through my house than such an ill-natured act as this."

The chearfulness of their conversation being interrupted by this accident, in which the guests could be of no service to their kind entertainer, and as the mother was taken up in administring consolation to the poor girl, whose disposition was too good hastily to forget the fudden loss of her little favourite. which had been fondling with here a few minutes before; and as Joseph and Fanny were impatient to get home and begin those previous ceremonies to their happiness which Adams had infifted on, they now offered to take their leave. The gentleman importuned them much to stay dinner: but when he found their eagerness to depart, he summoned his wife, and accordingly having performed all the usual ceremonies of bows and curties. more pleasant to be seen than to be related, they took their leave, the gentleman and his wife heartily withing them a good journey, and they as heartily thanking them for their kind entertainment. They then departed, Adams declaring, that this was the manner in which the people had lived in the golden age.

gar a can control H A : P. V.

A disputation on schools, held on the road between Mr Abrahum Adams and Joseph; and a discovery not unwelcome to them both.

UR travellers having well refreshed themselves at the gentleman's house, Joseph and Fanny with sleep, and Mr Abraham Adams with ale and tobasco, renewed their journey with great alacrity; and, pursuing the road in which they were directed, travelled many miles before they met with any adventure worth relating. In this interval, we shall present our readers with a very curious discourse, as we apprehend it, concerning public schools, which passed between Mr Joseph Andrews and Mr Abraham Adams.

They had not gone far, before Adams calling to Joseph, asked him if he had attended to the gentleman's story; he answered, To all the former part.' And don't you think,' says he, 'he was a very unhappy' man in his youth?' A very unhappy man indeed,' answered the other. 'Joseph,' cries Adams, screwing up his mouth, 'I have found it; I have discovered the cause of all the missortunes which befel him. A public school, Joseph, was the cause of all the calamities which he afterwards fuffered. · Public schools are the nurseries of all vice and immorality. All the wicked fellows, whom I remember at the university were bred at them. —Ah. Lord! I can remember as well as if it was but yesterday, a. knot of them; they called them king's school · lars, I forget why-very wicked fellows ! Ioseph, you may thank the Lord you were not bred at a public school, you would ' never have preserved your virtue as you. have. The first care I always take, is of at boy's morals: I had rather he should be as blockhead than an Atheist or a Presbyterian. What is all the learning of the worlds, compared to his immortal foul? What fhall a man take in exchange for his foul b. But the masters of great schools troubles themselves about no such things. I have known a lad of eighteen at the university, who hath not been able to say his catechism; but for my own part, I always: foourged a lad fooner for missing that than any other lesson. Believe me, child, all' that gentleman's misfortunes arose from his being educated at a public school. : 'Itidoth not become me,' answered Joseph, to dispute any thing, Sir, with you, especially a matter of this kind; for to be fure vou must be allowed by all the world to:

" be the best teacher of a school in all our 'Yes, that,' fays Adams, 'I. believe, is granted me; that I may without " much vanity pretend to---nay, I believe I may go to the next county too --- but glo-"riari non est meum" .-- However, Sir, as · you are pleafed to bid me fpeak,' fays Joseph,. you know my late master, Sir Thomas Booby, was bred at a public school, and he was the finest gentleman in all the neighbourhood. And I have often heard him-· fay, if he had a hundred boys he would breed them all at the same place: It was his opinion, and I have often heard him deliver it, that a boy taken from a public fchool, and carried into the world, will · learn more in one year there, than one of a private education will in five. He used to fay, the school itself initiated him a great way, (I remember that was his very expression); for great schools are little so-cieties, where a boy of any observation may see in epitome what he will afterwards find in the world at large.' ' Hinc illæ · lachryma; for that very reason, quoth · Adams, · I prefer a private school, where boys may be kept in innocence and igno-· rance: for, according to that fine passage. in the play of Cato, the only English tragedy I ever read,

If knowledge of the world must make men villains, 'May Juba ever live in ignorance.'

Who would not rather preserve the purity of his child, than with him to attain the whole circle of arts and fciences; which, by the bye, he may learn in the classes of a private school? For I would not be vain, but I esteem myself to be second to none, " nulli fecundum, in teaching these things fo that a lad may have as much learning in a private as in a public education.' And with fubmission, answered Joseph, he may get as much vice, witness several country gentlemen, who were educated within if five miles of their own houses, and are as wicked as if they had known the world from their infancy. I remember when L was in the stable, if a young horse was vicious in his nature, no correction would make him otherwise; I take it to be equally the fame among men: if a boy be of a mischievous, wicked inclination, no school, though ever fo private, will ever make him. good; on the contrary, if he be of a righteous temper, you may trust him to London, or where-ever else you please; he will be in no danger of being corrupted. Belides, I have often heard my master say, that the discipline practised in public schools was much better than that in private.'- You talk like a jackanapes,' cried Adams, and · so did your master. Discipline indeed ! Thecause one man focurges twenty or thirty boys more in a morning than, another, is Le therefore a botter disciplinarian? I do presime to confer in this point with all ! who have taught from Chiron's time to this day; and, if I was master of fix boys only, I would preferve as good discipline s among them as the master of the greatest s school in the world. I say nothing, young many remember Liay nothing; but if Sig Thomas himfelf had been educated pearer home, and under the tuition of somebody, remember I name nobody, it might have been better for him-but his father must institute him in the knowledge of the world. Nome mortalium omnibus heris fapit. feph feeing him run on in this manner, asked pardon many times, affuring him he had no intention to offend. 'I believe you had not, child,' faid he, 'and I am not angry with you. But for maintaining good difcipline in a school; for this -And then he ran on as before, named all the masters who are recorded in old books, and preferred himself to them all. Indeed, if this good man had an enthufiaim, or what the vulgar call a blind fide, it was this; he thought a fchool-master the greatest character in the world, and himself the greatest of all school-masters, neither of which points he would have given up to Alexander the Great at the head of his army.

Adams continued his subject till they came to one of the beautifullest spots of ground in the universe. It was a kind of natural amphitheatre, formed by the winding of a small rivulet, which was planted with thick woods, and the trees rose gradually above each other by the natural ascent of the ground they stood on; which ascent as they hid with their boughs, they seemed to have been disposed by the design of the most skilful planter. The soil was spread with a verdure which no paint could isnitate; and the whole place might have raised romantic ideas in elder minds than those of Joseph and Farmy, without the assistance of love.

Here they arrived about noon, and Joseph proposed to Adams that they should rest a while in this delightful place, and refress themselves with some provisions which the good-nature of Mrs Wilson had provided him with. Adams made no objection to the proposal; so down they sat, and pulling out a cold fowl, and a bottle of wine, they made a repast with a chearfulness which might have attracted the envy of more splenedid tables. I should not omit, that they found among their provisions a little paper containing a piece of gold, which Adams imagining had been put there by mistake, would have returned back, to restore it; but he was at last convinced by Joseph, that Mr Wilson had taken this handsome way of furnishing them with a supply for their journey, on his having related the distress which they had been in, when they were relieved by the generofity of the pedlar. Adams faid, he was glad to fee fuch an inflance of goodnefs, not fo much for the conveniency which it brought them, as for the fake of the doer. whose reward would be great in heaven. He likewife comforted himself with a reflection; that he should certainly have an opportunity of returning it him; for the gentleman was within a week to make a journey into Somersetshire, to pass through Adams's parish, and had faithfully promifed to call on him: a circumstance which we thought too immaterial to mention before; but which those who have as great affection for that gentleman as ourfelves, will rejoice at, as it may give them hopes of feeing him again. Then Joseph made a speech on charity, which the reader, if he is so disposed, may see in the next chapter; for we fcorn to betray him into any fuch reading, without first giving him warning.

• A THE ADVENTURES OF

C H A P. VI.

Moral reflections by Joseph Andrews, with the bunting udventure, and Parson Adams's miraculous escape.

HAVE often wondered, Sir, faid Joseph, to observe so few instances of charity a... mong mankind; for the the goodness of a man's heart did not incline him to relieve the distresses of his fellow-creatures, methinks the defire of honour should move him to it. What inspires a man to build fine houses, to purchase fine furniture, pictures, clothes, and other things at a great expence, but an ambition to be respected more than other people? Now, would not one great act of charity, one instance of redeeming a poor family from all the miseries of poverty, restoring an unfortunate tradesman, by a sum of money, tothe means of procuring a livelihood by his industry, discharging an undone debtor from his debts or a goal, or any fuch like example: of goodness, create a man more honour and respect than he could acquire by the finest house, furniture, pictures, or clothes, that were ever beheld? for not only the object him. felf, who was thus relieved, but all who heard the name of such a person, must, I imagine, reverence him infinitely more than the poffessor of all those other things: which when we fo admire, we rather praise the builder, the workman, the painter, the lacemaker, the tailor, and the rest, by whose ingenuity they are produced, than the person who by his money makes them his own. For my own part, when I have waited behind my lady in a room hung with fine pictures, while I have been looking at them, I have never once thought of their owner, nor hath any one elie, as I have observed; for when it has been asked whose picture that was, it was never once answered, the master's of the house: but Ammyconni, Paul Varnish, Hannibal Scratchi, or Hogarthi, which I suppose were the names of the painters: but if it was asked who redeemed such a one out of prison? who lent such a ruined tradesman money to fet up? who clothed that family of poor fmall children? it is very plain what must be the aniwer. And besides, these great folks are mistaken, if they imagine they get any honour at all by these means; for I do not remember I was ever with my Lady at any house where she commended the house or furniture, but I have heard her at her return home make sport and jeer at whatever the had before commended; and I have been told by other gentlemen in livery, that it is the fame in their families; but I defy the wifest man in the world to turn a true good action into ridicule. I defy him to do it. He who should endeavour it would be laughed at himself, instead of making others laugh. Nobody fcarce doily any good, yet they all agree in praising those who do. Indeed, it is strange that all men should consent in commending goodness, and no man endeavour to deserve that commendation: while, on the contrary, all rail at wickedness, and all are as eager to be what they abuse. know not the reason of; but it is as plain as day-light to those who converse in the world. as I have done these three years. ' the great folks wicked then?' fays Fanny. To be fure there are some exceptions, anfwered Joseph. Some gentlemen of our cloth report charitable actions done by their lords and masters; and I have heard Squire Pope, the great poet, at my Lady's table, tell stories of a man that lived at a place called Ross, and another at the Bath, one Al-Al-I forget his name, but it is in the book of verfes. This gentleman hath built up a stately house too, which the Squire likes very well: but his charity is feen farther than his Loufe; though it flands on a hill, ay, and brings him more honour, too. It was his charity that put him in the book, where the Squire says he puts all those who deserve it; and, to be fure, as he lives among all the great people, if there were any fuch, he would know them .- This was all of Mr Iofeph Andrews's speech which I could get him to recollect, which I have delivered as near as was possible in his own words, with a very finall embellishment. But I believe the reader hath not been a little surprised at the long filence of Parfon Adams, especially as so many occasions offered themselves to exert his curiofity and observation. The truth is, he was fast asleep, and had so been from the beginning of the preceding harrative. And indeed, if the reader confiders that so many hours had pailed fince he had closed his eyes, he will not wonder at his repose, though even Henly himself, or as great an orator (if any such be) had been in his rostrum or tub before him.

Joseph, who, whilft he was speaking, had continued in one attitude, with his head reclining on one side, and his eyes cast on the ground, no sooner perceived, on looking up, the position of Adams, who was stretched on his back, and snored louder than the usual braying of the animal with the long ears, than he turned towards Fanny, and taking her by the hand, began a dalliance, which, though consistent with the purest innocence

Vol. II.

and decency, neither he would have attempted, nor the permitted before any witness. Whilst they amused themselves in this harmless and delightful manner, they heard a pack of hounds approaching in full cry towards them, and presently afterwards saw a hare pop forth from the wood, and, croffing the water, land within a few yards of them in the meadows. I The hare was no fooner on shore, than if seated itself on its hinder Jegs, and listened to the found of the purfuers. Fanny was wonderfully pleafed with the little wretch, and eagerly longed to have it in her arms, that the might preferve it from the dangers which feemed to threaten it: but the rational part of the creation do not always aptly distinguish their friends from their foes: what wonder then if this filly creature, the moment it beheld her, fled from the friend. who would have protected it, and traverfing the meadows again, passed the little rivulet on the opposite side? It was, however, so spent and weak, that it fell down twice or thrice in its way. This affected the tender heart of Fanny, who exclaimed, with tears in her eyes, against the barbarity of worrying a poor innocent defenceless animal out of its life, and putting it to the extremest torture for diversion. She had not much time to make reflections of this kind; for on a fudden the hounds rushed through the wood, which resounded with their throats the throats of their retinue who attended them on horseback. The dogs now past the rivulet, and purfued the footsteps of the hare ; five horsemen attempted to leap over, three of whom succeeded, and two were in the attempt thrown from their faddles into the water: their companions, and their own horses too, proceeded after their sport, and left their friends and riders to invoke the affiftance of fortune, or employ the more active means of strength and agility for their deliverance. Joseph, however, was not so unconcerned on this occasion; he left Fanny for a moment to herfelf, and ran to the gentlemen, who were immediately on their legs, shaking their ears, and easily with the help of his hand attained the bank (for the rivulet was not at all deep); and without flaying to thank their kind affifter, ran dripping across the meadows, calling to their brother sportsmen to stop their horses: but they heard them not.

The hounds were now very little behind their poor reeling, staggering prey, which, fainting almost at every step, crawled thro' the wood, and had almost got round to the place where Fanny stood, when it was overtaken by its enemies; and, being driven out of the covert, was caught, and instantly tore to pieces before Fanny's face, who was unable to assist it with any aid more powerful than pity; nor could she prevail on Joseph, who had been himself a sportsman in his youth, to attempt any thing contrary to the laws of hunting, in favour of the hare, which he faid was killed fairly.

The hare was caught within a yard or two of Adams, who may afleep at a little distance from the lovers: and the hounds in devouring it, and pulling it backwards and forwards, had drawn it io close to him, that fome of them (by militake perhaps for the hare's skin) laid hold of the skirts of his caffock; others at the same time applying their. teeth to his wig, which he had with a handkerchief fastened to his head, began to pull him about: and had not the motion of his body had more effect on him than feemed to be wrought by the noise, they must certainly. have tafted his flesh, which delicious flavour might have been fatal to him: but being, roufed by these tuggings, he instantly awaked, and with a jerk delivering his head from his wig, he with most admirable dexterity recovered his legs, which now feemed the only members he could entrust his safety to. Having therefore escaped likewise from at least a third part of his cassock, which he willing-

JOSEPH ANDREWS, 10

By left as his exuviæ or spoils to the enemy, he fled with the utmost speed he could fummon to his affistance. Nor let this be any detraction from the bravery of his character: let the number of the enemies, and the furprise in which he was taken, be considered: and i there be any modern fo outragiously brave, that he cannot admit of flight in any circumstance whatever, I say (but I whisper that foftly, and I folemnly declare, without any intention of giving offence to any brave man in the nation) I say, or rather I whisperthat he is an ignorant fellow, and hath never read Homer nor Virgil, nor knows he any thing of Hector or Turnus; nay, he is unacquainted with the history of some great men living, who, though as brave as lions, ay, as tigers, have run away, the Lord knows how far, and the Lord knows why, to the furprise of their friends, and the entertainment of their enemies. But if persons of fuch heroic disposition are a little offended at the behaviour of Adams, we assure them they shall be as much pleased at what we thall immediately relate of Joseph Andrews. The master of the pack was just arrived, or, as the sportsmen call it, come in, when Adams fet out, as we have before mentioned. This gentleman was generally faid to be a great lover of humour; but, not to mince the matter, especially as we are upon this fubject, he was a great hunter of men. deed he had hitherto followed the sport only with dogs of his own species; for he kept two or three couple of barking curs for that use only. However, as he thought he had now found a man nimble enough, he was willing to indulge himself with other sport; and accordingly crying out, 'Stole away,' encouraged the hounds to pursue Mr Adams, fwearing it was the largest Jack-hare he ever faw: at the same time hallooing and hooping as if a conquered foe was flying before him; in which he was imitated by these two or three couple of human or rather twolegged curs on horseback which we have mentioned before.

Now thou, whoever thou art, whether a muse, or by what other name soever thou chusest to be called, who presidest over biography, and hast inspired all the writers of lives in these our times: thou who didst insuses in these our times: thou who didst insuses in these our times: thou who didst insuses fuch wonderful humour into the pen of immortal Gulliver; who hast carefully guided the judgement, whilst thou hast exasted the nervous manly style of thy Mallet: thou who hadst no hand in that dedication and presace, or the translations which thou wouldst willingly have struck out of the life of Cicero: Lastly, thou who, without the assistance of the least spice of literature, and even against his inclination, hast, in some pages of his book, forced Colley Cibber to write English; do thou assist me in what I find myself unequal to. Do thou introduce on the plain the young, the gay, the brave Joseph Andrews, whilst men shall view him with admiration and envy; tender virgins with love and anxious concern for his fafety.

No. fooner did Joseph Andrews perceive the diffress of his friend, when first the quick fcenting dogs attacked him, than he grasped his cudgel in his right hand, a cudgel which his father had of his grandfather, to whoma mighty strong man of Kent had given it for a present in that day when he broke three heads on the stage. It was a cudgel of mighty strength and wonderful art, made by one of Mr Deard's best workmen, whom no other artificer can equal: and who hath made all those sticks which the beaus have lately walked with about the Park in a morning: but this was far his master-piece; on its head was engraved a nose and chin, which might have been mistaken for a pair of nutcrackers. The learned have imagined it defigned to represent the Gorgon: but it was in fact copied from the face of a certain long English baronet of infinite wit, humour, and gravity. He did intend to have engraved here many histories: As the first night of. Captain B——'s play, where you would have seen crities in embroidery transplanted from the boxes to the pit, whose ancient inhabitants were exalted to the galleries, where they played on catcalls. He did intend to have painted an auction room, where Mr Cock would have appeared alost in his pulpit, trumpeting forth the praises of a Chinabason; and with assonishment wondering that "Nobody bids more for that fine, that." superb"—He did intend to have engraved many other things, but was forced to leave all out for want of room.

No fooner had Joseph grasped his cudgelin his hands, than lightning darted from his eyes; and the heroic youth, fwift of foot, ran with the utmost speed to his friend's as-He overtook him just as Rockwood had laid hold of the skirt of his cassock, which being torn, hung to the ground. Reader, we would make a fimile on this occasion, but for two reasons: the first is, it would interrupt the description, which should be rapidin this part; but that doth not weigh much, many precedents occurring for fuch an interruption: the fecond, and much the greater reason is, that we could find no simile adequate to our purpose: for indeed, what instance could we bring to fet before our reader's eyes at once the idea of friendships courage, youth, beauty, strength, and swiftness; all which blazed in the person of Joseph Andrews. Let those therefore that describe lions and tigers, heroes siercer than both, raise their poems or plays with the simile of Joseph Andrews, who is himself sabove the reach of any fimile.

Now Rockwood had laid fast hold on the Parson's skirts, and stopt his slight; which Joseph no sooner perceived, than he levelled his cudgel at his head, and laid him fprawl-Jowler and Ringwood then fell on his great-coat, and had undoubtedly brought him to the ground, had not Joseph, collecting all his force, given Jowler such a rap on the back, that, quitting his hold, he ran howling over the plain. A harder fate remained for thee, O Ringwood, Ringwood the best hound that ever pursued a hare, who never threw his tongue but where the fcent was undoubtedly true; good at trailing; and fure in a highway, no babbler, no over-runner, respected by the whole pack, who, whenever he opened, knew the game was at hand. He fell by the stroke of Joseph. Thunder, and Plunder, and Wonder, and Blunder, were the next victims of his wrath, and meafured their lengths on the ground. Then, Fairmaid, a bitch which Mr John Temple had bred up in his house, and sed at his own table, and lately sent the squire sifty miles for a present, ran siercely at Joseph, and bit him by the leg; no dog was ever siercer than she, being descended from an Amazonian breed, and had worried bulls in her own country, but now waged an unequal sight; and had shared the sate of those we have mentioned before, had not Diana (the reader may believe or not as he pleases) in that instant interposed, and in the shape of the huntsman snatched her favourite up in her arms.

The parson now faced about, and withhis crabstick felled many to the earth, and scattered others, till he was attacked by Cæsar, and pulled to the ground. Then Joseph slew to his rescue, and with such might fell on the victor, that, O eternal blot to his name! Cæsar ran yelping away.

The battle now raged with the most dreadful violence, when, lo! the huntsman, a manof years and dignity, lifted his voice, and called his hounds from the fight; tellingthem, in a language they understood, that itwas in vain to contend longer; for that fate had decreed the victory to their enemies.

Thus far the muse hath with her usual dignity related this prodigious battle, a battle we apprehend never equalled by any poet, romance or life-writer whatever, and having brought it to a conclusion she ceased; we shall therefore proceed in our ordinary style with the continuation of this history. fquire and his companions, whom the figure of Adams, and the gallantry of Joseph, had first the wn into a violent fit of laughter. and who had hitherto beheld the engagement with more delight than any chace, shooting-match, race, cock-fighting, bull or bear-baiting had ever given them, began now to apprehend the danger of their hounds, many of which lay fprawling in the fields. The fourre therefore having first called his friends about him, as guards, for fafety of his person, rode manfully up to the combatants, and fummoning all the terror he was master of into his countenance, demanded with an authoritative voice of Joseph, What he meant by affaulting his dogs in that manner? Joseph answered with great intrepidity, That they had first fallen on his friend; and if they had belonged to the greatest man in the kingdom, he would have treated them in the same way: for whilst his veins contained a fingle drop of blood, he would not stand idle by, and fee that gentleman, (pointing to Adams) abused either by man or beast; and having fo faid, both he and Adams brandithed their wooden weapons, and put them-

felves into such a posture, that the squire and his company thought proper to preponderate, before they offered to revenge the cause of their sourced allies

At this instant, Fanny, whom the apprehension of Joseph's danger had alarmed so much that, forgetting her own, she and made the utmost expedition, came up. The squire and all the horsemen were so surprised with her beauty, that they immediately fixed both their eyes and thoughts folely on her, every one declaring he had never feen fo charming a creature. Neither mirth nor anger engaged them a moment longer; but all fat in The huntiman only was free filent amaze. from her attraction, who was bufy in cutting the ears of the dogs, and endeavouring to recover them to life; in which he succeeded so well, that only two of no great note remained flaughtered on the field of action. Upon this the huntiman declared, 'Twas well it was no worse; for his part, he could onot blame the gentleman, and wondered his master would encourage the dogs to · hunt Christians; that it was the furest way

The fquire being informed of the little mischief that had been done, and perhaps having more mischief of another kind in his

to spoil them, to make them follow vermin

· instead of sticking to a hare.'

head, accosted Mr Adams with a more favourable aspect than before: he told him he was forry for what had happened; that he had endeavoured all he could to prevent it the moment he was acquainted with his cloth. and greatly commended the courage of his fervant; for fo he imagined Joseph to be. He then invited Mr Adams to dinner, and defired the young woman might come with him. Adams refused a long while; but the invitation was repeated with fo much earnestness and courtefy, that at length he was forced to accept it. His wig and hat, and other spoils of the field, being gathered together by Joseph, (for otherwise probably they would have been forgotten) he put himself into the best order he could: and then the horse and foot moved forward in the fame pace towards the fquire's house, which flood at a very little distance.

Whilst they were on the road, the lovely Fanny attracted the eyes of all; they endeavoured to ontvie one another in encontiums on her beauty; which the reader will pardon my not relating, as they had not any thing new or uncommon in them: so must be likewise my not setting down the many curious jests which were made on Adams; some of them declaring that parson-hunting was the best sport in the world; others commending his standing at bay, which, they said, he had done as well as any badger; with such-like merriment, which, though it would ill become the dignity of this history, afforded much laughter and diversion to the squire and his facetious companions.

Vol. II. K

C H A P. VII.

A scene of roasting very nicely adapted to the present taste and times.

as his dinner was ready. A little dispute arose on the account of Fanny, whom the squire, who was a bachelor, was desirous to place at his own table; but she would not consent, nor would Mr Adams permit her to be parted from Joseph; so that she was at length with him consigned over to the kitchen, where the servants were ordered to make him drunk; a favour which was likewise intended for Adams; which design being executed, the squire thought he should easily accomplish what he had, when he sirft saw her, intended to perpetrate with Fanny.

It may not be improper, before we proceed farther, to open a little the character of this gentleman, and that of his friends, The master of this house then was a man of a very confiderable fortune; a bachelor, as we have faid, and about forty years of age: he had been educated (if we may use the eas pression) in the country, and at his own home, under the care of his mother and a tutor, who had orders never to correct him, nor to compel him to learn more than he liked, which it feems was very little, and that only in his childhood; for from the age of fifteen he addicted himself entirely to hunting and other rural amusements, for which his mother took care to equip him with horfes, hounds, and all other necessaries: and his tutor, endeavouring to ingratiate himself with his young pupil, who would, he knew, be able handsomely to provide for him, became his companion, not only at these exercifes, but likewise over a bottle, which the young fquire had a very early relish for. At the age of twenty, his mother began to think fhe had not fulfilled the duty of a parent: she therefore resolved to persuade her son, if possible, to that which she imagined would well supply all that he might have learned at a public school or university. This is what they commonly call travelling; which, with the help of the tutor who was fixed on to attend him, she easily succeeded in. He made in three years the tour of Europe, as they term it, and returned home well furnished . K .2

with French cloaths, phrases and servants. with a hearty contempt for his own country. especially what had any savour of the plain spirit and honesty of our ancestors. His moither greatly applauded herself at his return: and now being mafter of his own fortune. he foon procured himfelf a feat in parliament, and he was, in the common opinion, one of the finest gentlemen of his age: but what distinguished him chiefly, was a strange delight which he took in every thing which is ridiculous, odious, and abfurd in his own fpecies: fo that he never chose a companion without one or more of these ingredients, and those who were marked by Nature in the most eminent degree with them, were most his fas. vourites: if he ever found a man who either had not, or endeavoured to conceal these imperfections, he took great pleasure in invent ing methods of forcing him into abfurdities. which were not natural to him, or in draw! ing forth and exposing those that were; for which purpose he was always provided with a fet of fellows which we have before called. Curs; and who did indeed no great honour to the canine kind: their business was to hunt out and display every thing that had any favour of the above-mentioned qualities; and especially in the gravest and best characters: but if they failed in their fearch

they were to turn even virtue and wisdom shemselves into ridicule for the diversion of their master and seeder. The gentlemen of surlike disposition, who were now at his house, and whom he had brought with him from London, were an old half-pay officer, a player, a dull poet, a quack-doctor, a scraping siddler, and a lame German dancing master.

As foon as dinner was feryed, while Mr Adams was faying grace, the captain conveved his chair from behind him: fo that when he endeavoured to feat himself, he sell down on the ground; and thus completed joke the first, to the great entertainment of the whole company. The feeond joke was performed by the poet, who fat next him on the other fide, and took an opportunity, while poor Adams was respectfully drinking to the master of the house, to overturn a plate of foup into his breeches; which, with the many apologies he made, and the parfon's gentle answers, caused much mirth in the company. Joke the third was ferved up by one of the waiting-men, who had been ordered to convey a quantity of gin into Mr Adams's ale, which he declaring to be the best liquor he ever drank, but rather toorich of the malt, contributed again to their laughter. Mr Adams, from whom we had K. 3.

moli of this elation, could not recollect all the jefts of this kind practifed on him, which the inoffentive disposition of his even heart made him flow in discovering; and indeed had it not been for the information which we received from a fervant of the family. this part of our history, which we take to be none of the leaft curious, must have been deplorably imperfect: though we must own it probable, that fome more jokes were (as they call it) cracked dusing their dinner; but we have by no means been able to come at the knowledge of them. When dinner was removed, the poet began to sepent fome verfes, which he faid were made extempore. The following is a copy of them proqued with the greatest difficulty.

An extempore Poem on Parson Adams.

Did ever mostal fuch a parson view;

. His cassock old, his wig not over new !

Well might the hounds have him for for miffalest

"But would it not make any mortal flame,

1. To fee this parson taken for a hare?

Could Phoebus err thus großly, even he For a good player might have taken then

All hounds that will hunt fox or other verming will hunt a piece of rufty bacon trailed on the ground.

At which words the bard whip'd off the player's wig; and received the approbation of the company, rather perhaps for the dexterity of his hand than his head. The player. instead of retorting the jest on the poet, began to difflay his talents on the fame fubject. He repeated many feraps of wit out of plays, reflecting on the whole body of the clergy. which were received with great acclamations by all present. It was now the dancing-mak ffer's turn to exhibit his talents: he therefore addressing himself to Adams in broken English told him. " He was a man ver well made for de dance, and he fuppose by his walk, dat he had learn of fome great mafter! He faid; "it was ver pretty quality in elergyman to " dance? and concluded with defiring him to dance a minuet, telling him his caffock would ferve for petticoars; and that he would himself be his partner. At which words without waiting for an answer, he pulled out his gloves, and the fieldler was preparing his. fiddle. The complay all offered the dancing-master wagers that the parson outdan-sed him, which he refused, saying, he believed fo too; for he had never feen and man in his life who looked de dance so well as de gentleman: he then Repped forwards to take Adams by the hand, which the latter haffily withdrew, and at the lame time clea-ching his fift, advised him not to carry the jest too far, for he would not endure being put upon. The dancing-mafter no fooner faw the fift than he prudently retired out of its reach, and flood aloof mimicking Adams. whose eyes were fixed on him, not guesting what he was at, but to avoid his laving hold on him, which he had once attempted. In the mean while, the captain perceiving an opportunity, pinned a cracker or devil to the caffock, and then lighted it with their little smoaking candle. Adams being a stranger to this sport, and believing he had been blown up in reality, started from his chair, and jumped about the room, to the infinite iov of the beholders, who declared he was the best dancer in the universe. As soon as the devil had done tormenting him, and he had a little recovered his confusion, he returned to the table, standing up in the posture of one who intended to make a speech. They all cried out, ' hear him, hear him;' and he then fooke in the following manner: Sir, I am forry to see one to whom Providence hath been so bountiful in bestowing " his favours, make so ill and ungrateful a return for them; for though you have not insulted me yourself, it is visible you have delighted in those that do it, nor have once discouraged the many rudenesses which discouraged the many rudenesses which * have been shewn towards me; indeed towards yourfelf, if you rightly understood / them; for I am your guest, and by the · laws of hospitality entitled to your protec-One gentleman hath thought proper to produce some poetry upon me, of which I shall only say, that I had rather, be the subject than the composer. hath been pleased to treat me with diffe-4 spect as a parson. I apprehend my order " is not the object of fcorn, nor that I can s become fo, unless by being a diffrace to it, which I hope poverty will never be called. Another gentleman indeed hath repeated fome fentences, where the order itself is mentioned with contempt. He says they sare taken from plays. I am sure such s plays are a feandal to the government which permits them, and curfed will be the nation where they are represented. E How others have treated me I need not obferve; they themselves, when they reflect, must allow the behaviour to be as improe per to my years as to my cloth. You found me, Sir, travelling with two of my parishsioners, (I emik your hounds falling on me; t for I have quite forgiven it, whether it sproceeded from the wantonness or neglisence of the huntiman) my appearance might very well perfunde you that your invitation was an act of charity, though in reality we were well provided; yes, Sir, if we had had an hundred miles to travel. we had fufficient to bear our expences in a noble manner.' (At which words he produced the half guinea which was found in the basket.) ' I do not shew you this out of oftentation of riches, but to convince you I fpeak truth. Your feating me at your table was an honour which I did not am-5 bitiously affect. When I was here, I endeavoured to behave towards you with the utmost respect ; if I have failed, it was not with defign; not could I, certainly, fo far he guilty as to deserve the insults I have fuffered. If they were meant therefore either to my order or my poverty (and you fee I am not very poor) the fhame doth onot ly at my door, and I heartily pray that the fin may be averted from yours.' He thus finished, and received a general clap from the whole company. Then the gentleman of the house told him, ' he was forry for what had happened; that he could not s accuse him of any share in it: that the verses were, as himself had well observed, fo bad, that he might easily answer them; and for the ferpent, it was undoubtedly a very great affront done him by the dancing master, for which if he well threshed

i him ashe deserved, he should be very much e pleased to see it.' (in which probably he spoke truth.) Adams answered, Whoever had done it, it was not his profession to · punish him that way; but for the person whom he had accused, I am a witness, fays he, ' of his innocence; for I had my eye on him all the while. Whoever he was, God forgive him, and bestow on him a little more fense as well as humanity. The captain answered with a surly look and accent, 'That he hoped he did not mean to reflect on him; d --- n him, he had as much · imanity as another, and if any man faid he had not, he would convince him of his mistake by cutting his throat.' Adams smiling, said, 'He believed he had spoke right by accident.' To which the captain returned, 'What do you mean by my fpeaking right? if you was not a parson, I would not take these words; but your gown protects you. If any man who wears a fword had faid fo much, I had pulled him by the nose before this.' Adams replied, if he attempted any rudeness to his person, he would not find any protection for himfelf in his gown; and clenching his fift, declared, he had threshed many a stouter The gentleman did all he could to encourage this warlike disposition in Adams, and was in hopes to have produced a battle; but he was disappointed, for the captain made no other answer than It is very well, 'you are a parson;' and so drinking off a bumper to old mother church, ended the dispute.

Then the doctor, who had hitherto been filent, and who was the gravest, but most mischievous dog of all, in a very pompous fpeech highly applauded what Adams had faid; and as much discommended the beha-He proceeded to encomiums viour to him. on the church and poverty; and lastly recommended forgiveness of what had passed to Adams, who immediately answered, 'That every thing was forgiven; and in the warmth of his goodness he filled a bumper of strong beer, (a liquor he preferred to wine) and drank a health to the whole company, fliaking the captain and the poet heartily by the hand, and addresting himself with great respect to the doctor; who indeed had not laughed outwardly at any thing that palled, as he had a perfect command of his muscles, and could laugh inwardly without betraving the least symptoms in his countenance. The doctor now began a fecond formal speech, in which he declaimed against all levity of comversation, and what is usually called mirth. He faid, 'There were amusements fitted for * persons of all ages and degrees, from the rattle to the discussing a point of philosophy, 5 and that men discovered themselves in nothing more than in the choice of their a-'musements: for,' says he, 'as it must greatly raise our expectation of the future conduct in life of boys, whom in their tender years we perceive instead of taw or balls or other childish play-things, to chuse, at their leifure hours, to exercise their genius in contentions of wit, learning and fuch · like: so must it inspire one with equal con-* tempt of a man, if we should discover him s playing at taw or other childish play. Adams highly commended the doctor's opinion, and faid, ' He had often wondered at fome paffages in ancient authors, where . Scipio, Lælius, and other great men, were represented to have passed many hours in amusements of the most trifling kind.' The doctor replied, ' He had by him an old Greek manuscript where a favourite diversion of Socrates was recorded.' Ay,' fays the Parson eagerly, 'I should be most infinitely obliged to you for the favour of perufing it.' The doctor promised to send it him, and farther faid, that he believed he could describe it. 'I think,' fays he, 'as near as I can remember, it was this. There was a throne erected, on one fide of which fat a king,

Vol. II.

T22 THE ADVENTURES OF

- and on the other a queen, with their guards and attendants ranged on both fides: to them was introduced an ambassador, which part Socrates always used to perform himfelf; and when he was led up to the footfleps of the throne, he addressed himself to * the monarchs in some grave speech, full of virtue, and goodness, and morality, and fuch like. After which he was feated between the king and queen, and royally entertained. This I think was the chief part. -Perhaps, I may have forgot fome particulars; for it is long fince I read it? Adams faid, It was indeed a diversion wor-* thy the relaxation of fo great a man; and 4 thought fomething refembling it should be ' instituted among our great men, instead of cards and other idle pastimes, in which, he was informed, they trifled away too much of their lives. He added, 'The Christian religion was a nobler subject for these fpeeches than any Socrates could have in-' vented.' The gentleman of the house approved what Mr Adams faid, and declared, he was resolved to perform the ceremony this very evening. To which the doctor objected, as no one was prepared with a speech, 'unless,' faid he, (turning to Adams, with a gravity of countenance which would have deceived a more knowing man,) ' you have a fermon about you, Doctor .- ' Sir,' fays Adams. 'I never travel without one. for fear of what may happen.' He was casily prevailed on by his worthy friend, as he now called the doctor, to undertake the part of the ambassador; so that the gentleman fent immediate orders to have the throne erected; which was performed before they had drank two bottles: and perhaps the reader will hereafter have no great reason to admire the nimbleness of the servants. deed, to confess the truth, the throne was no more than this: there was a great tub of water provided, on each fide of which were placed two stools raised higher than the furface of the tub, and over the whole was laid a, blanket; on these stools were placed the king and queen, namely the mafter of the house, and the captain. And now the ambaffador was introduced, between the poet and the doctor, who having read his fermon, to the great entertainment of all present, was led up to his place, and feated between their majesties. They immediately rose up, when the blanket wanting its supports at either end, gave way, and fouled Adams over head and ears in the water. The captain made his escape, but unluckily the gentleman himself not being as nimble as he ought, Adams caught hold of him before he descended from his throne. and pulled him in with him, to the entire fecret satisfaction of all the company. Adams, after ducking the fourre twice or thrice, leapt out of the tub, and looked sharp for the doctor, whom he would certainly have conveyed to the same place of honour; but he had wifely withdrawn: he then searched for his crabilick, and having found that, as well as his fellow-travellers, he declared he would not flav a moment longer in fuch a house. He then departed, without taking leave of his host, whom he had exacted a more severe revenge on than he intended: for as he did not use sufficient care to dry himself in time, he caught a cold by the accident, which threw him into a fever, that had like to have cost him his life.

C H A P. VIII.

Which some readers will think too short, and, others too long.

DAMS, and Joseph, who was no less enraged than his friend at the treatment he met with, went out with their sticks in their hands, and carried off Fanny, not withstanding the opposition of the servants; who did all, without proceeding to violence; in their power to detain them. They walked as fast as they could, not so much from any apprehension of being pursued, as that Mr Adams might by exercise prevent any harm from the water. The gentleman who had given such orders to his servants concerning. Fanny, that he did not in the least fear her getting away, no sooner heard that she was gone, than he began to rave, and immediately dispatched several with orders, either to bring her back or never return. The poet, the player, and all but the dancing-master and doctor, went on his errand.

The night was very dark, in which our friends began their journey: however, they made such expedition that they soon arrived at an inn, which was at seven miles distance. Here they unanimously consented to pass the evening; Mr Adams being now as dry as he was before he had set out on his embassy.

This inn, which indeed we might call an ale-house, had not the words The New Inn, been writ on the sign, afforded them no better provision than bread and cheese, and ale; on which, however, they made a very comfortable meal; for hunger is better than a French cook.

They had no fooner supped, than Adams, returning thanks to the Almighty for his food, declared he had ate his homely commons with much greater satisfaction than his splendid dinner, and expressed great contempt for the folly of mankind, who sacrificed their hopes of heaven to the acquisition of value wealth: fince so much comfort was to be found in the humblest state and the lowest provision. 'Very true, Sir,' fays a grave man, who fat fmoaking his pipe by the fire, and who was a traveller as well as himself. I have often been as much furprifed as you are, when I consider the value which man-' kind in general fet on riches; fince every day's experience shews us how little is in ' their power; for what indeed truly desireable can they bestow on us? Can they give beauty to the deformed, strength to the weak, or health to the infirm? Surely, if they could, we should not see so many illfavoured faces haunting the affemblies of the great, nor would fuch numbers of · feeble wretches languish in their coaches and palaces. No, not the wealth of a kingdom can purchase any paint to dress pale ugliness in the bloom of that young maiden, o nor any drugs to equip difease with the via gour of that young man. Do not riches. bring us folicitude instead of rest, envy inflead of affection, and danger instead of fafety? Can they prolong their own post · fession, or lengthen his days who enjoys. them? So far otherwise, that the sloth, the luxury, the care which attend them, shorten the lives of millions, and bring them with pain and mifery to an untimely grave.

e little ferious attention, that even the bleffings of this world are not to be purchased with riches. A doctrine, in my opinion, ont only metaphysically, but, if I may so fav. mathematically demonstrable; and which I have been always to perfectly convinced of, that I have a contempt for nothing fo much as for gold. Adams now began a long discourse; but as most which he faid occurs among many authors who have treated this subject, I shall omit inferting it. During its continuance Joseph and Fanny retired to reft, and the host likewife left the room. When the English Parfon had concluded, the Romish resumed the discourse, which he continued with great bitterness and invective; and at last ended. by defiring Adams to lend him eighteenpence to pay his reckoning; promiting, if he never paid him, he might be assured of his prayers. The good man answered, that eighteen-pence would be too little to carry him any very long journey; that he had half a guinea in his pocket, which he would divide with him. He then fell to fearching his pockets, but could find no money; for indeed the company with whom he dined. had passed one jest upon him which we did not then enumerate, and had picked his pocket.

of all that treasure which he had so ostentatiously produced.

Bless me,' cried Adams, 'I have cer-tainly lost it; I can never have spent it. Sir e as I ama Christian, I had a whole half-guinea in my pocket this morning, and have not ' now a fingle halfpenny of it left. Sure the " devil must have taken it from me.' 'Sir.' answered the priest, smiling; • make no excuses; if you are not willing to elend me the money, I am contented.' Sir.' cries Adams, ' if I had the greatest sum in the world; ay if I had ten pounds about me, I would bestow it all to rescue any · Christian from distress. I am more vexed at my loss on your account than my own. Was ever any thing so unlucky? because I have ono money in my pocket, I shall be suspected to be no Christian.' I am more unlucky'. quoth the other, 'if you are as generous as you fay: for really a crown would have made me happy, and conveyed me in plenty to the place I am going, which is not above twenty miles off, and where'l can arrive by to-morrow night. I affure you I am not accustomed to travel pennyless. I am but ' just arrived in England; and we were forced by a storm in our passage, to throw all we had over-board. I don't suspect but this fellow will take my word for the trifle I owe him: but I hate to appear so mean as to confess myself without a shilling to such people: for these, and indeed too many others, know little difference in their estimation between a beggar and a thief.' However, he thought he should deal better with the host that evening than the next morning; he therefore relolved to fet out immediately, notwithstanding the darkness; and, accordingly, as foon as the host returned, he communicated to him the fituation of his affairs; upon which the host scratching his head, answered, 'Why, I do not know, master, if it be so, and you have no money. I must trust, I think, though I had rather always have ready money if I could; but, marry, you look like so honest a gentleman that I don't fear your paying me, if it was twenty times as much.' The priest made no reply, but taking leave of him and Adams as fait as he could, not without confusion, and perhaps with some distrust of Adams's fincerity, departed.

He was no sooner gone than the host fell a-shaking his head, and declared, if he had suspected the fellow had no money, he would not have drawn him a single drop of drink; saying, he despaired of ever seeing his face again; for that he looked like a consounded rogue. 'Rabbit the fellow,' cries he, 'I thought by his talking so much about riches, that he had a hundred pounds at least in his pocket. Adams chid him for his suspicions, which he said were not becoming a Christian; and then, without restecting on his loss, or considering how he himself should depart in the morning, he retired to a very homely bed, as his companions had before; however, health and fatigue gave them a sweeter repose than is often in the power of velvet and down to bestow.

C H A P. IX.

Containing as surprising and bloody adventures as can be found in this or perhaps any other authentic bistory.

I T was almost morning, when Joseph Andrews, whose eyes the thoughts of his dear Fanny had opened, as he lay fondly meditating on that lovely creature, heard a violent knocking at the door over which he lay. He presently jumped out of bed, and opening the window, was asked, if there were no travellers in the house? and presently, by another voice, If two men and a young woman had not taken up there their lodging that night? Though he knew not the voices, he began to entertain a suspicion of the truth; for indeed he had received some information from one of the servants of the squire's house, of his design; and answered in the negative. One of the servants. who knew the host well, called out to him by his name, just as he had opered another window, and asked him the same question e to which he answered, in the affirmative. O ho!' faid another; ' have we found you?' and ordered the host to come down and open his door. Fanny, who was as wakeful as Joseph, no sooner heard all this, than she leaped from her bed, and hastily putting on her gown and petticoats, ran as fast as poffible to Joseph's room, who then was almost dreffed: he immediately let her in, and embracing her with the most passionate tenderness, bid her fear nothing, for that he would die in her defence. 'Is that a reason why I should not fear,' fays she, ' when I should I ofe what is dearer to me than the whole world?' Joseph then kiffing her hand, faid he could almost thank the occasion which had extorted from her a tenderness she would never indulge him with before. He then ran and waked his bedfellow Adams, who was yet fast afleep, notwithstanding many calls from Joseph; but was no sooner made sensible of the danger, than he leaped from his bed, without confidering the presence of

Fanny, who hastily turned her face from him, and enjoyed a double benefit from the dark, which as it would have prevented any offence to an innocence less pure, or a modesty less delicate, so it concealed even those blushes which were raised in her.

Adams had foon put on all his cloaths but his breeches, which in the hurry he forgot: however, they were pretty well supplied by the length of his other garments: and now the house-door being opened, the captain, the poet, the player, and three servants came The captain told the host, that two fellows who were in his house, had run away with a young woman; and defired to know in which room the lay. The hoft, who prefently believed the story, directed them, and instantly the captain and poet, jostling one another, ran up. The poet, who was the nimblest, entering the chamber first, searched the bed and every other part, but to no purpose; the bird was flown, as the impatient reader, who might otherwise have been in pain for her, was before advertised. They then inquired where the men lay, and were approaching the chamber, when Joseph roared out in a loud voice, that he would shoot the first man who offered to attack the door. The captain inquired what fire-arms they had? to which the host answered, he Vol.II. M believed they had none; nay, he was almost convinced of it: for he had heard one afk the other in the evening, what they should have done, if they had been overtaken when they had no arms? to which the other anfwered, they would have defended themselves with their sticks as long as they were able, and God would affift a just cause. This fatisfied the captain, but not the poet, who prudently retreated down stairs, faying, it - was his bufiness to record great actions, and not to do them. The captain was no fooner well fatisfied that there were no fire-arms. than bidding defiance to gunpowder, and fwearing he loved the smell of it, he ordered the fervants to follow him, and marching boldly up, immediately attempted to force the door, which the fervants foon helped him to accomplish. When it was opened, they discovered the enemy drawn up three deep; Adams in the front, and Fanny in the rear. The captain told Adams, that if they would go all back to the house again, they should be civilly treated: but unless they consented, he had orders to carry the young lady with him, whom there was great reason to believe they had stolen from her parents; for notwithstanding her difguise, her air, which she could not conceal, sufficiently discovered her wirth to be infinitely superior to theirs. Fanny Eurfling into tears, folemply affured him he was mistaken; that she was a poor helpless foundling, and had no relation in the worldwhich she knew of; and throwing herself on her knees, begged that he would not attempt to take her from her friends, who, she was convinced, would die before they would lofe her: which Adams confirmed with words not far from amounting to an oath. The captain swore he had no leisure to talk, and bidding them thank themselves for what happened, he ordered the fervants to fall on, at the same time endeavouring to pass by Adams, in order to lay hold on Fanny; but the parson interrupting him, received a blow from one of them, which, without confidering whence it came, he returned to the captain, and gave him fo dextrous a knock in that part of the Romach, which is vulgarly called the pit, that he staggered some paces backwards. The captain, who was not accultomed to this kind of play, and who wifely apprehended the confequence of fuch another blow, two of them feeming to him equal to a thrust through the body, drew forth his hanger, as Adams approached him, and was levelling a blow at his head, which would probably have filenced the preacher for ever, had not. Joseph in that instant lifted up a certain. huge stone-pot of the chamber with one hand. M 2 which fix beaus could not have lifted with both, and discharged it, together with the contents, full in the captain's face. The uplifted hanger dropped from his hand, and he fell prostrate on the floor with a lumpish noise, and his halfpence rattled in his pockets the red liquor which his veins contained, and the white liquor which the pot contained, ran in one stream down his face and his clothes. Nor had Adams quite escaped, some of the water having in its passage shed its honours on his head, and began to trickle down the wrinkles or rather furrows of his cheeks, when one of the fervants fnatching a mop out of a pail of water which had already done its duty in washing the house, pushed it in the parson's face; yet could he not bear him down; for the parfon wresting the mop from the fellow with one hand, with the other brought his enemy as low as the earth, having given him a stroke over that part of the face, where, in some men of pleafure, the natural and artificial nofes are conjoined.

Hitherto Fortune feemed to incilne the victory on the traveller's fide, when, according to her custom, she began to shew the fickleness of her disposition: for now the host entering the field, or rather chamber of battle, slew directly at Joseph, and darting

Ris head into his stomach (for he was a stout fellow, and an expert boxer) almost staggered him; but Joseph stepping one leg back, did with his lest hand so chuck him under the chin that he reeled. The youth was pursuing his blow with his right hand, when he received from one of the servants such a stroke with a cudgel on his temples, that it instantly deprived him of sense, and he meafured his length on the ground.

Fanny rent the air with her cries, and Adams was coming to the affiftance of Jo-Jeph: but the two ferving-men and the hoft: now fell on him, and foon fubdued him, tho' he fought like a madman, and looked for black with the impressions he had received from the mop, that Don Quixote would certainly have taken him for an inchanted Moor ... But now follows the most tragical part; for the captain was risen again, and seeing Jofeph on the floor, and Adams fecured, he instantly laid hold on Fanny, and with the affiltance of the poet and player, who hearing the battle was over, were now come up,, dragged her, crying and tearing her hair, from the fight of her Joseph, and with a perfect deafness to all her intreaties, carried her down stairs by violence, and fastened heron the player's horse; and the captain mounting his own, and leading that on which this poor miferable wretch was, departed without any more confideration of her cries than a butcher hath of those of a lamb: for indeed his thoughts were entertained only with the degree of favour which he promised himself from the squire on the success of this adventure.

The fervants, who were ordered to fecure Adams and Joseph as safe as possible, that the squire might receive no interruption to his design on poor Fanny, immediately, by the poet's advice, tied Adams to one of the bed-poss, as they did Joseph on the otherside, as soon as they could bring him to himself; and then leaving them together, back to back, and desiring the host not to fet them at liberty, nor to go near them till he had further orders, they departed towards their master; but happened to take a different road from that which the Captain had fallen into.

C H A P. X.

A discourse between the poet and player; of no other use in this history, but to divert the reader.

BEFORE we proceed any farther in this tragedy, we shall leave Mr Joseph and Mr Adams to themselves, and imitate the wise conductors of the stage; who, in the midst of a grave action, entertain you with some excellent piece of satire or humour called a dance. Which piece, indeed, is therefore danced, and not spoke, as it is delivered to the audience by persons whose thinking saculty is by most people held to ly in their heels; and to whom, as well as heroes, who think with their hands, nature hath only given heads for the sake of conformity, and as they are of use in dancing, to hang their hats on.

The poet, addressing the player, proceeded thus: 'As I was saying,' (for they had been at this discourse all the time of the engagement above stairs), 'the reason you have no 'good new plays is evident; it is from your discouragement of authors. Gentlemen will not write, Sir, they will not write without the expectation of fame or profit, or perhaps both. Plays are like trees;

$40 THE ADVENTURES OF

* which will not grow without nourishment :: but like mushrooms, they shoot up spontaneously, as it were, in a rich foil. " muses, like vines, may be pruned, but not with a hatchet. The town, like a peevishchild, knows not what it desires, and is always best pleased with a rattle. A farcewriter hath indeed fome chance for fuccess; but they have lost all taste for the fublime. Though I believe one reason of. their depravity is the badness of the actors. f If a man writes like an angel, Sir, those. fellows know not how to give a fentiment. ' utterance.' ' Not so fast,' says the player, the modern actors are as good at least as their authors, nay, they come nearer their illustrious predecessors; and I expect a Booth on the stage again, sooner than a. Shakespeare or an Otway; and indeed I may turn your observations against you, and: with truth fay, that the reason no authors are encouraged, is, because we have no good new plays.' 'I have not affirmed the contrary,' faid the poet; ' but I am furprifed you grow fo warm; you cannot imagine yourself interested in this dispute: I hope you have a better opinion of my talle, than to apprehend I squinted at yourfelf. No. Sir, if we had fix such actors as you, we should soon rival the Bettertons:

and Sandfords of former times; for, without a compliment to you, I think it im-· possible for any one to have excelled you in most of your parts: nay, it is a solemn truth, and I have heard many, and all great judges, express as much; and you • will pardon me if I tell you, I think every time I have feen you lately, you have conflantly acquired some new excellence, like a fnowball - You have deceived me in · my estimation of perfection, and have out-· done what I thought inimitable.' · You are as little interested,' answered the player, ' in what I have faid of other poets; for d-n me, if there are not many strokes, ay, whole scenes in your last tragedy, which at least equal Shakespeare. There is a de-! licacy of fentiment, a dignity of expression in it, which I will own many of our gentle-' men did not do adequate justice to. confess the truth, they are bad enough, and I pity an author who is present at the ' murder of his works.'- ' Nay, it is but · feldom that it can happen,' returned the poet: 'the works of most modern authors, like dead-born children, cannot be murdered. It is fuch wretched, half-begotten, half-writ, lifeless, spiritless, low, groveling fuff, thet I almost pity the actor who is sobliged to get it by heart, which must be almost as difficult to remember as words. in a language you do not understand.' I am fure,' faid the player, ' if the fentences. have little meaning when they are writ, when they are spoken they have less. know scarce one who ever lays an emphasis right, and much less adapts his action to his character. I have feen a tender lover · in an attitude of fighting with his mistress, and a brave hero fuing to his enemy with his fword in his hand !--- I don't care to abuse my profession; but rot me, if in my heart I am not inclined to the poet's fide. It is rather generous in you than just,' said the poet; ' and though I hate to speak illof any person's production; nay, I never 6 do it, nor will---but yet, to do justice to the actors, what could Booth or Betterton. have made of fuch horrible stuff as Fenton's Mariamne, Froud's Philotas, or Male let's Eurydice, or those low, dirty, last dying speeches, which a fellow in the city or Wapping, your Dillo or Lillo, what was his name, called Tragedies?'--- Very well, fays the player, and pray what do wou think of fuch fellows as Quin and De-· lane, or that face-making puppy young Cibber, that ill-look'd dog Macklin, or that faucy flut Mrs Clive? What work would they make with your Shakespeares.

- Otways, and Lees? How would those har monious lines of the last come from their - * tongues?
  - " ----- No more; for I disdain
  - All pomp when thou art by-far be the noise
  - Of kings and crowns from us, whose gentle souls
  - Our kinder fates have steer'd another way.
  - * Free as the forest birds we'll pair together,
  - Without rememb'ring who our fathers were?
  - Fly to the arbours, grots, or flow'ry meads,
  - * There in fost murmurs interchange our souls,
  - ' Together drink the crystal of the stream,
  - Or tafte the yellow fruit which Autumn yields;
  - 4 And when the golden evening calls us home,
  - Wing to our downy nests, and sleep till morn.
  - · Or how would this disdain of Otway,
  - " Who'd be that foolish, fordid thing, call'd man?
- ' Hold, hold, hold,' faid the poet, ' do re-
- peat that tender speech in the third act of
- 'my play which you made fuch a figure in.'---'I would willingly,' faid the player,
- but I have forgot it.'--- Ay, you was not
- quite perfect enough in it when you played
- 'it,' cries the poet, ' or you would have
- · had fuch an applause as was never given
- on the stage; an applause I was extremely
- concerned for your losing '--- 'Sure,' fays the
- player, if I remember, that was hilled more ' than any passage in the whole play.'-- ' Ay, ' your speaking it was his'd,' faid the poet. ' My speaking it!' faid the player .-- 'I mean ' your not speaking it,' said the poet. 'You was out, and then they his'd.'- 'They his'd, and then I was out, if I remember, answered the player; and I must say this for myfelf, that the whole audience allowed I did your part justice: fo don't lay the damnation of your play to my account. ' I don't know what you mean by damnation,' replied the poet. ' Why, you know it was acted but one night,' cried the player 'No,' faid the poet, 'you and the whole town were my enemies; the pit were all my enemies; fellows that would cut my throat, ' if the fear of hanging did not restrain them. All tailors, Sir, all tailors.'--- Why should the tailors be fo angry with you?' cries the player. 'I suppose you don't employ so ma-'ny in making your cloaths.' I admit your ' lest,' answered the poet; ' but you remember the affair as well as myfelf; you know there was a party in the pit and upper gale lery would not fuffer it to be given out aegain; tho much, ay infinitely the majority, all the boxes in particular, were defirous of it; nay, most of the ladies swore they never would come to the house till it was acted again. Indeed I must own their policy was good, in not letting it be siven out a fecond time; for the rafcals knew, if it had gone a second night, it would have run fifty: for if ever there was distress in a tragedy---I am not fond of my own '-performance; but if I should tell you what the best judges said of it. --- Nor was it en-'tirely owing to my enemies neither, that it did not succeed on the stage as well as it hath fince among the polite readers; for · you can't say it had justice done it by the * performers.'---- * I think,' answered the player, 'the performers did the distress of it justice: for I am sure we were in distress enough, who were pelted with oranges all the last act: we all imagined it would have ' been the last act of our lives.'

The poet, whose fury was now raised, had just attempted to answer, when they were interrupted, and an end put to their discourse by an accident; which if the reader is impatient to know, he must skip over the next chapter, which is a fort of counterpart to this, and contains some of the best and gravest matters in the whole book, being a distourse between Parson Abraham Adams and Mr Joseph Andrews.

Vol. IL N

C H A P. XI.

Containing the exhortations of Parson Adams to his friend in affiction; calculated for the instruction and improvement of the reader.

JOSEPH no fooner came perfectly to thimself, than perceiving his mistress gone, he bewailed her loss with groans, which would have pierced any heart but those which are possessed by some people, and are made of a certain composition, not unlike flint in its hardness, and other properties; for you may firike fire from them, which will dart through the eyes, but they can never distil one drop of water the same way. His own, poor youth, was of a fofter composition; and, at these words, 'O my dear Fanny! O my love! shall I never, never see thee more? his eves overflowed with tears, which would have become any thing but a hero. In a word, his despair was more easy to be conceived than related-

Mr Adams, after many groans, fitting with his back to Joseph, began thus in a forrowful tone: 'You cannot imagine, my good child, that I entirely blame these first agonies of your grief: for when missortunes attack us by surprize, it must require finfinitely more learning than you are mafter of to relift them: but it is the bulinels. of a man and a Christian, to summon reafon as quickly as he can to his aid: and • fhe will prefently teach him patience and fubmission. Be comforted, therefore, child, · I say be comforted. It is true you have · lost the prettiest, kindest, loveliest, sweetest * young woman, one with whom you might have expected to have lived in happiness, · virtue and innocence; by whom you might have promised yourself many little darlings, who would have been the delight of your vouth, and the comfort of your age. You have not only loft her, but have reason to fear the utmost violence which lust and • power can inflict upon her. Now indeed vou may easily raise ideas of horror, which " might drive you to despair.'- O I shall run mad,' cries Joseph. O that I could but command my hands to tear my eyes out, and my flesh off.'--- If you would use them to fuch purposes, I am glad you can't, answered Adams. I have stated · your misfortune as strong as I possibly can; but, on the other fide, you are to confider you are a Christian; that no accident happens to us without the divine permission, and that it is the duty of a man and a Chriflian to submit. We did not make our-N. 2

Joseph andrews. 147

' felves; but the fame power which made us, rules over us, and we are absolutely at his disposal; he may do with us what he pleases, nor have we any right to complain. A fecond reason against our com-' plaint is our ignorance; for as we know not future events, so neither can we tell to what purpose any accident tends; and that which at first threatens us with evil, may in the end produce our good. I should indeed have faid our ignorance is twofold ' (but I have not at present time to divide · properly;) for as we know not to what . purpose any event is ultimately directed; · fo neither can we affirm from what cause it originally fprung. You are a man, and consequently a sinner; and this may be a punishment to you for your fins; indeed in this fense it may be esteemed as a good; e yea, as the greatest good, which satisfies the anger of Heaven, and averts that ' wrath which cannot continue without our destruction. Thirdly, our impotency of relieving ourselves, demonstrates the folly and absurdity of our complaints: for whomodo we refist? or against whom do we complain, but a power, from whose shafts no armour can guard us, no speed can fly; a power which leaves us no hope but in-" fubmission?' O Sir,' cried Joseph.

f all this is very true, and very fine, and "I could hear you all day, if I was not fo grieved at heart as now I am.' Would you take physic,' says Adams, 'when you: are well, and refuse it when you are fick? Is not comfort to be administered to the afflicted, and not to those who re-" joice, or those who are at ease?"--- O you. have not spoken one word of comfort to " me yet,' returned Joseph. 'No!' cries Adams, 'What am I then doing? what can-" I fay to comfort you?" O tell me,' cries. Joseph, that Fanny will escape back to my arms, that they shall again inclose that · lovely creature, with all her fweetness, all her untainted innocence about her.'-Why, perhaps you may, cries Adams; but I can't promise you what's to come. "You must with perfect refignation wait the event; if the be restored to you again, it is your duty to be thankful, and so it is if fle be not: Joseph, if you are wise, and truly know your own interest, you will e peaceably and quietly fubmit to all the dispensations of Providence, being tho-"roughly affured, that all the misfortunes,. ' how great foever, which happen to the righteous, happen to them for their good. -Nay, it is not your interest only, but: s your duty to abitain from immoderate.

grief; which, if you indulge, you are not worthy the name of a Christian.'--- He fpoke these last words with an accent a little feverer than usual; upon which Joseph begged him not to be angry, faying, he mistook him, if he thought he denied it was his duty; for he had known that long ago. fignifies knowing your duty, if you do not perform it? answered Adams. Ioseph, I never thought you had this stubbornness in your mind.' Joseph replied, he fancied he misunderstood him; which I affure you,' fays he, ' you do, if you imasine I endeavour to grieve; upon my foul I don't.' Adams rebuked him for fwearing, and then proceeded to enlarge on the folly of grief, telling him, all the wife men and philosophers, even among the heathens, had written against it, quoting several pasfages from Seneca, and the Confolation, which though it was not Cicero's, was, he faid, as good almost as any of his works; and concluded all by hinting, that immoderate grief in this case might incense that power which alone could restore him his Fanny. This reason, or indeed rather the idea which it raised of the restoration of his mistress, hadmore effect than all which the parson had faid before, and for a moment abated his agonies; but when his fears fufficiently fet before his eyes the danger that poor creature was in, his grief returned again with repeated violence, nor could Adams in the least affwage it; though it may be doubted in his behalf, whether Socrates himself could have prevailed any better.

They remained sometime in silence: and groans and sighs issued from them both; at length Joseph burst out in the following soliloquy:

'Yes, I will bear my forrows like a man;

But I must also feel them as a man;

I cannot but remember fuch things were,

'And were most dear to me.'---

Adams asked him what stuff that was he repeated?—To which he answered, they were some lines he had gotten by heart out of a play—'Ay, there is nothing but hea-'thenism to be learned from plays,' replied he:—'I never heard of any plays sit for a 'Christian to read but Cato and the Confcious Lovers; and I must own, in the latter, there are some things almost solemn enough for a fermon.' But we shall now leave them a little, and enquire after the subject of their conversation.

C H A P. XII.

More adventures, which we hope will as much please as surprise the reader.

which passed between the poet and the player, nor the grave and truly solemn discourse of Mr Adams, will, we conceive, make the reader sufficient amends for the anxiety which he must have selt on the account of poor Fanny, whom we lest in so deplorable a condition. We shall therefore now proceed to the relation of what had happened to that beautiful and innocent virgin, after she fell into the wicked hands of the captain.

The man of war having conveyed his charming prize out of the inn a little before day, made the utmost expedition in his power towards the Squire's house, where this delicate creature was to be offered up a facrifice to the lust of a ravisher. He was not only deaf to all her bewailings and entreaties on the road, but accosted her ears with impurities, which, having been never before accustomed to them, she happily for herself very little understood. At last he changed his note, and attempted to soothe and molify her, by setting forth the splendor and luxury.

which would be her fortune with a man who would have the inclination, and power, too, to give her whatever her utmost wishes could defire; and told her he doubted not but she would foon look kinder on him, as the instrument of her happiness, and despise that pitiful fellow, whom her ignorance could only make her fond of. She answered, She knew not whom he meant; the never was fond of any pitiful fellow. 'Are you affronted, Madam?' fays he, 'at my calling him fo? but what better can be faid of one in a livery, notwithstanding your fondness for him?' She returned. That she did not understand him : that the man had been her fellow-fervants and the believed was as honest a creature as any alive; but as for fondness for men-' I warrant ye,' cries the captain, ' we shall find means to perfuade you to be fond; and I advise you to yield to gentle ones; for you may be affured that it is not in. your power, by any struggles whatever, topreserve your virginity two hours longer. Lit will be your interest to consent; for the Squire will be much kinder to you, if he enjoys you willingly than by force.'—At which words she began to call aloud for asfistance, (for it was now open day), but finding none, fhe lifted her eyes up to heaven, and supplicated the Divine assistance to preferve her innocence. The captain told hem-If the perfitted in her vociferation, he would find a means of stopping her mouth. And now the poor wretch, perceiving no hopes of fuccour, abandoned herself to despair, and fighing out the name of Joseph! Joseph! a river of tears ran down her lovely cheeks, and wet the handkerchief which covered her bofom. A horseman now appeared in the road, upon which the captain threatened her violently if she complained: however, the moment they approached each other, she begged him with the utmost earnestness to relieve a distressed creature who was in the hands of a ravisher. The fellow stopped at those words; but the captain assured him it was his wife, and that he was carrying her home from her adulterer: which to fatisfied the fellow, who was an old one, (and perhaps a married one too), that he wished him a good. journey, and rode on. He was no foonerpast, than the captain abused her violently for breaking his commands, and threatened to gagg her, when two more horsemen, armed with pistols, came into the road just before them. She again folicited their affiftance, and the captain told the same story as before. Upon which one faid to the other. That's a charming wench, Jack! L wish I had been in the fellow's place, who ever he is.' But the other, instead of anfwering him, cried out eagerly, 'Zounds, I * know her!' and then turning to her, faid, Sure you are not Fanny Goodwill !'--- Indeed, indeed I am,' fhe cried --- O John, I * know you now ---- Heaven hath fent you to my affiltance, to deliver me from this wicked man, who is carrying me away for his vile purposes---O, for God's sake, rescue me from him!' A fierce dialogue immediately enfued between the captain and these two men, who being both armed with piftels, and the chariot which they attended being now arrived, the captain faw both force and stratagem were vain, and endeavoured to make his escape; in which, however, he could not succeed. The gentleman who rode in the chariot, ordered it to stop, and, with an air of authority, examined into the merits of the cause; of which, being advertised by Fanny, whose credit was confirmed by the fellow who knew her, he ordered the captain, who was all bloody from his encounter at the inn, to be conveyed as a prisoner behind the chariot, and very gallantly took Fanny into it; for, to fay the truth, this gentleman (who was no other than the celebrated Mr Peter Pounce, and who preceded the Lady Booby only a few miles, by fetting out eardier in the morning), was a very gallant perfon, and loved a pretty girl better than any thing, besides his own money, or the money of other people.

The chariot now proceeded towards the inn, which, as Fanny was informed, lay in their way, and where it arrived at the very time when the poet and player were disputing below stairs, and Adams and Joseph were discoursing back to back above: just at that period to which we brought them both in the two preceding chapters, the chariot stopt at the door, and in an instant Fanny leaping from it, ran up to her Joseph .--O reader, conceive, if thou canst, the joy which fired the breafts of these lovers on this meeting; and if thy own heart doth not fympathetically affift thee in this conception, I pity thee fincerely from my own: for let the hard-hearted villain know this, that there is a pleasure in a tender sensation beyond any which he is capable of talling.

Peter being informed by Fanny of the prefence of Adams, stopt to see him, and receive his homage; for, as Peter was an hypocrite, a fort of people whom Mr Adams never saw through, the one paid that respect to his seeming goodness which the other believed to be paid to his riches; hence Mr Adams was so much his favourite, that he once lent him four pounds thirteen shillings and sixpence, to prevent his going to goal, on no greater feetinity than a bond and judgment, which probably he would have made no use of, though the money had not been (as it was) paid exactly at the time.

It is not perhaps easy to describe the figure of Adams; he had risen in such a hurry, that he had on neither breeches, garters, nor Rockings: nor had he taken from his head a red spotted handkerchief, which by night bound his wig, turned infide out, around his He had on his torn cassock, and his great coat; but as the remainder of his eaffock. hung down below his great coat, so did a fmall stripe of white, or rather whitish linen, appear below that; to which we may add the feveral colours which appeared on his face, where a long piss-burnt beard served to retain the liquor of the stone pot, and that of a blacker hue which distilled from the mop .--- This figure, which Fanny had delivered from his captivity, was no fooner spied by Peter, than it disordered the composed gravity of his muscles; however, he advised him immediately to make himself clean, nor would accept his homage in that pickle.

The poet and player no fooner faw the captain in captivity, than they began to confider of their own fafety, of which flight prefented itself as the only means; they there-

Vol. II. O

Fore both of them mounted the poet's horse, and made the most expeditious retreat in their power.

The hoft, who well knew Mr Pounce, and Lady Booby's livery, was not a little surprised at this change of the scene, nor was his consusion much helped by his wife, who was now just risen, and having heard from him the account of what had passed, comforted him with a decent number of sools and blockheads; asked him why he did not consult her; and told him, he would never leave sollowing the nonsensical d states of his own numscull, till the and her family were ruined.

Joseph being informed of the captain's arrival, and seeing his Fanny now in safety, quitted her a moment, and running down stairs, went directly to him, and stripping off his coat, challenged him to fight; but the captain restuded, saying, he did not understand boxing. He then grasped a cudgel in one hand, and catching the captain by the collar with the other, gave him a most severe drubbing; and ended with telling him, he had now had some revenge for what his dear Fanny had suffered.

When Mr Pounce had a little regaled himfelf with fome provision which he had in his chariot, and Mr Adams had put on the best appearance his clothes would allow him,

Founce ordered the captain into his prefence; for he faid he was guilty of felony, and the next justice of peace should commit him; but the servants (whose appetite for revenge is soon satisfied) being sufficiently contented with the drubbing which Joseph had inslicted on him, and which was indeed of no very moderate kind, had suffered him to go off, which he did, threatening a severe revenge against Joseph, which I have never heard he thought proper to take.

The mistress of the house made her voluntary appearance before Mr Pounce, and with a thousand curties told him. She hoped his Honour would pardon her husband, who was a very nonfense man, for the sake of his poor family; that indeed if he could be ruined alone, she should be very willing of it: for because, as why, his Worlhip very well knew he deserved it: but she had three poor small children, who were not capable to get their own living; and if her husband was fent to goal, they must all come to the parith: for the was a poor weak woman; continually a-breeding, and had no time to work for them. She therefore hoped his Honour would take it into his Worship's confideration, and forgive her husband this time; for the was fure he never intended any harm to man, woman, or child; and if it was not for that block-head of his own, the man in some things was well enough; for she had had three children by him in Jess than three years, and was almost ready to cry out the fourth time. She would have proceeded in this manner much longer, had not Peter stopped her tongue, by telling her he had nothing to say to her husband, nor her neither. So, as Adams and the rest had assured her of forgiveness, she cried and curt-fied out of the room.

Mr Pounce was defirous that Fanny should continue her journey with him in the chariote but the absolutely refused, saying, the would ride behind Joseph, on a horse which one of Lady Booby's servants had equipped him with. But, alas! when the horse appeared, it was found to be no other than that identical beast which Mr Adams had left behind him at the inn, and which these honest fellows, who knew him, had redeemed. deed, whatever horse they had provided for Tofeph, they would have prevailed with him to mount none, no, not even to ride before his beloved Fanny, till the Parson was supplied: much less would he deprive his friend of the beaft which belonged to him, and which he knew the moment he faw, though Adams did not: however, when he was reminded of the affair, and told that they had brought the horse with them which he left behind, he answered - Bless me! and so I · did.

Adams was very defirous that Joseph and Fanny should mount this horse, and declared. he could walk very eafily home. 'If I walks "ved alone,' fays he, 'I would wager a failling, that the pedestrian outstripped the equefician travellers; but as I intend: to take the company of a pipe, peradventure I may be an hour later.' One of the fervants whifpered Joseph to take him at hisword, and fuffer the old put to walk if he would: this proposal was answered with an angry look and a peremptory refulal by Jofeph, who, catching Fanny up in his arms, averred he would rather carry her home in that manner, than take away Mr Adams's horfe, and permit him to walk on foot.

Perhaps, reader, thou hast seen a contest between two gentlemen, or two ladies; quickly decided, though they have both afferted they would not eat fuch a nice morfel, and each infifted on the other's accepting it; but, inreality, both were very defirous to fwallow it themselves. Do not therefore conclude hence. that this dispute would have come to a speedy. decision: for here both parties were heartily in earnest, and it is very probable they would thave remained in the inn-yard to this days.

had not the good Peter Pounce put a stop to it; for finding he had no longer hopes of fatisfying his old appetite with Fanny, and being defirous of having some one to whom he might communicate his grandeur, he told the Parson he would convey him home in his chariot. This favour was by Adams, with many bows and acknowledgments, accepted; though he afterwards faid, He aftended the chariot rather that he might not offend; than from any defire of riding in it, for that in his heart he preferred the pedestrian even to the vehicular expedition. All matters being now fettled, the chariot, in which rode Adams and Pounce, moved forwards: and Joseph having bornoved a pillion from the host, Fanny had just seated herself thereon; and had laid hold of the girdle which herlover wore for that purpose, when the wise beaft, who concluded that one at a time was fufficient, that two to one were odds, erci discovered much uneafiness at his double load, and began to confider his hinder as his fore-legs, moving the direct contrary way to that which is called forwards. Nor could Ioseph, with all his horsemanskip, persuade him to advance: but without having any regard to the lovely part of the lovely girl which was on his back, he used such agitations, that had not one of the men come in immediately to her affiftance, flee had, in plain. English, tumbled backward on the ground. This inconvenience was presently remedied by an exchange of horses; and then Fanny being again placed on her pillion, on a better-natured, and somewhat better-fed beaft. the parson's horse, finding he had no longer odds to contend with, agreed to march; and the whole procession set forward for Booby-Hall, where they arrived in a few hours, without any thing remarkable happening on the road, unless it was a curious dialogue between the parson and the steward; which, to use the language of a late apologist, a pattern to all biographers, " waits for the " reader in the next chapter."

C H A P. XIII.

A curious dialogue which passed between Mr. Abraham Adams and Mr Peter Pounce, hetter worth reading than all the works of Colley Cibber and many others.

HE chariet had not proceeded farbefore Mr. Adams observed it was a very fine day. Ay, and a very fine country too, answered Pounce. I should think fo more; returned Adams, if I had not lately travelled over the Downs, which I take to exceed this and all other prospects.

f in the universe.' 'A fig for prospects." answered Pounce, one agre here is worth. ten there; and, for my own part, I have. no delight in the prospect of any land but "my own,' Sir,' faid Adams, 'you can indulge yourfelf with many fine profpects of ' that kind.' 'I thank God I have a little.' replied the other, with which I am content, and envy no man: I have a little, Mr Adams, with which I do as much good as I can.' Adams answered. That riches without charity were nothing worth; for that they were a bleffing only to him who madethem a bleffing to others. You and I. faid Peter, ' have different notions of charity. I own, as it is generally used. I do not like the word, nor do I think it becomes one of us gentlemen: it is a mean parson-likequality; tho' I would not infer many parsons have it neither.' Sir,' said Adams, 'my definition of charity is, a generous disposition to relieve the distressed.' There is fomething in that definition, answered Peter, ' which I like well enough; it is, as vou fay, a disposition-and does not so much confift in the act as in the disposition 5 to do it; but alas! Mr Adams, who are · meant by the distressed? Believe me, the distresses of mankind are mostly imaginary, s and it would be rather folly than goods

- ness to relieve them.' 'Sure, Sir,' replied Adams, ' hunger and thirst, cold and nakedness; and other distresses which attend the poor, can never be faid to be imaginary evils.' 'How can any man complain of hunger,' faid Peter, 'in a country where · fuch excellent fallads are to be gathered in almost every field? or of thirst, where every · river and stream produces such delicious · potations? And as for cold and nakedness, they are evils introduced by luxury and cultom. A man naturally wants cloaths on more than a horse or any other animal; and there are whole nations who go without them: but these are things perhaps which ' you who do not know the world'-' You will pardon me, Sir,' returned 'Adams; " I have read of the Gymnofophilts." ' A ' plague of your Jehofaphats,' cried Peter: the greatest fault in our constitution is the provision made for the poor, except that perhaps made for some others. Sir, I . have not an estate which doth not contribute almost as much again to the poor as * to the land tax; and I do affure you, I expect to come myfelf to the parish in the end? To which Adams giving a diffenting smile, Peter thus proceeded: 'I fancy, Mr Adams, you are one of those who imagine ' I am a lump of money; for there are many who, I fancy, believe that not only my pockets, but my whole cloaths are lined with bank-bills; but I affure you, you are all mistaken: I am not the man the worldefteens me. If I can hold my head above water, it is all I can. I have injured myfelf by purchasing. I have been too liberal of my money. Indeed I fear my heir will find my affairs in a worse situation than they are reputed to be. Ah! he will have reason to wish I had loved money more and land less. Pray, my good neighbour, where should I have that quantity of * riches the world is fo liberal to bestow on • me? where could I possibly, without I had fole it, acquire such a treasure? ' Why struly,' fays Adams, 'I have been always of your opinion; I have wondered as well s as yourfelf with what confidence they could report fuch things of you, which have to • me appeared as mere impossibilities: for you know, Sir, and I have often heard you fay it, that your wealth is of your own acs quifition, and can it be credible that in 4 your fhort time you fhould have amaffed I fuch a heap of treasure as these people will: ! have you worth? Indeed, had you inherited an estate like Sir Thomas Booby, which had descended in your family for many generations, they might have had a * colour for their affertions.' Why, what "do they fay I am worth?" cries Peter, with a malicious ineer. 'Sir,' answered Adams; · I have heard fome aver you are not worth ! less than twenty thousand pounds;' at which Peter frowned. ' Nay, Sir,' faid Adams, you ask me only the opinion of others; for my own part I have always denied it. onor did I ever believe you could possibly be worth half that fum.' However, Mr Adams,' faid he, fqueezing him by the hand, 'I would not fell them all I am worth for double that fum; and as to what you believe or they believe, I care on not a fig, no, not a fart. I am not poor, ' because you think me so, nor because you attempt to undervalue me in the country. · I know the envy of mankind very well: but I thank Heaven I am above them. It ' is true my wealth is of my own acquisition: I have not an estate like Sir Thomas Booby, that has descended in my family through many generations; but I know heirs of fuch estates who are forced to travel about the country like fome people in torn caffocks, and might be glad to accept of a ' pitiful curacy for what I know. Yes, Sir, as shabby fellows as yourself, whom no man of my figure, without that vice of good nature about him, would fuffer to ride in a chariot with him.' Sir,' faid Adams, 'I value not your chariot a rush; and if I had known you had intended to affront me, I would have wasked to the world's end on foot ere I would have accepted a place in it. However, Sir, I will foon rid you of that inconvenience; and fo saying, he opened the chariot door, without calling to the coachman, and leapt out into the highway, forgetting to take his hat along with him; which however Mr Pounce threw after him with great violence. Joseph and Fanny stopped to bear him company the rest of the way, which was not above a mile.

BOOK FOURTH.

C H A P. I.

The arrival of Lady Booby and the rest at Booby-hall.

THE coach and fix, in which Lady Booby rode, overtook the other travellers as they entered the parish. She no Sooner law Joseph, than her cheeks glowed with red, and immediately after became as totally pale. She had, in her furprise, almost stopped her coach; but recollected herself timely enough to prevent it. She entered the parish amidst the ringing of bells, and the acclamations of the poor, who were rejoiced to fee their patroness returned after so long an absence, during which time all her rents had been drafted to London, without a shilling being spent among them, which tended not a little to their utter impoverishing; for if the court would be feverely missed in such a city as London, how much more must the absence of a great person of fortune be felt in a little country village, for whose inhabitants such a family finds a constant employment and supply; and with the offals of whose table, the infirm. Vol. II.

aged, and infant poor, are abundantly fed, with a generofity which hath scarce a visible effect on their benefactor's pockets?

But if their interest inspired so public a joy into every countenance, how much more forcibly did the affection which they bore Parson Adams operate upon all who beheld his return? They flocked about him like dutiful children round an indulgent parent, and vied with each other in demonstrations of duty and love. The parson, on his side, shook every one by the hand, enquired heartily after the healths of all that were absent, of their children and relations, and expressed a satisfaction in his face, which nothing but benevolence made happy by its objects could insuse.

Nor did Joseph and Fanny want a hearty welcome from all who saw them. In short, no three persons could be more kindly received, as indeed none ever more deserved to be univerfally beloved.

Adams carried his fellow-travellers home to his house, where he insisted on their partaking whatever his wise, whom, with his children, he found in health and joy, could provide; where we shall leave them enjoying perfect happiness over a homely meal, to view scenes of greater splendour, but infinitely less bliss.

Our more intelligent readers will doubtless suspect, by this second appearance of Lady Booby on the stage, that all was not ended by the difmission of Joseph; and to be honest with them, they are in the right; the arrow had pierced deeper than she imagined; nor was the wound fo eafily to be cured. The removal of the object foon cooled her rage, but it had a different effect on her love: that departed with his person; but this remained lurking in her mind with his image. Restless, interrupted slumbers, and confused horrible dreams were her portion the first In the morning, Fancy painted her a more delicious scene; but to delude, not delight her; for before the could reach the promised happiness, it vanished, and left her to curfe, not blefs the vision.

She started from her sleep, her imagination being all on fire with the phantom, when her eyes accidentally glancing towards the spot where yesterday the real Joseph had stood, that little circumstance raised his idea in the liveliest colours in her memory. Each look, each word, each gesture, rushed back on her mind with charms which all his coldness could not abate. Nay, she imputed that to his youth, his folly, his awe, his religion, to every thing but what would instantly have produced contempt, want of passion for the fex; or, that which would have roused her hatred, want of liking to her.

Reflection then hurried her farther, and told her, she must see this beautiful youth no more; nay, suggested to her, that she herself had dismissed him for no other fault than probably that of too violent an awe and respect for herself; and which she ought rather to have esteemed a merit, the effects of which were besides so easily and surely to have beenremoved: she then blamed, she cursed the hasty rashness of her temper; her fury was vented all on herself, and Joseph appeared innocent in her eyes. Her passion at length grew fo violent, that it forced her on feeking relief, and now the thought of recalling him; but pride forbade that; pride, which foon drove all fofter paffions from her foul, and represented to her the meanness of him she was fond of. That thought foon began to obscure his beauties; contempt fucceeded next, and then disdain, which presently introduced her hatred of the creature who had given her fo much uneafiness. These enemies of Joseph had no sooner taken possession of her mind, than they infinuated to her a thousand things in his disfavour; every thing but dillike of her person; a thought, which as it would have been intolerable to bear, she checked the moment it endeavoured to rife. Revenge came now to her affiftance; and she considered her difmission of him stript, and without a chat racter, with the utmost pleasure. She rioted in the feveral kinds of mifery, which her imagination suggested to her might be his fate; and with a smile composed of anger, mirth, and fcorn, viewed him in the rags in which her fancy had dreffed him.

Mrs Slipslop being summoned, attended her mistress, who had now, in her own opinion, totally subdued this passion. Whilst she was dreffing, she asked if that fellow had been. turned away according to her orders. Slipflop answered, she had told her Ladyship so, (as indeed she had.) '-And how did he behave?' replied the Lady. 'Truly, Madam,' eries Slipflop, ' in fuch a manner that infected every body who faw him. The poor · lad had but little wages to receive: for he constantly allowed his father and mother half his income; fo that, when your Ladyfhip's livery was stript off, he had not wherewithal to buy a coat, and must have gone naked, if one of the footmen had not incommodated him with one; and whilst he was standing in his shirt, (and, to say truth, he was an amorous figure) being told your · Ladyship would not give him a character, · he fighed, and faid, he had done nothing willingly to offend; that for his part be * should always give your Ladyship a good character wherever he went; and he prayed Godato bless you; for you was the best of ladies, though his enemies had fet you against him: I wish you had not turned him away; for I believe you have not a faith-' fuller fervant in the house.'- How came. you, then,' replied the Lady, ' to advise meto turn him away?' 'I, Madam!' faid Slipslop, . I am sure you will do me the justice to fay, I did all in my power to prevent it; but I saw your Ladyship was angry; and it is not the bufiness of us upper servants to hinterfeare on those occasions.'---And was it not you, audacious wretch,' cried the Lady, 'who made me angry? Wasit not your tittle-tattle, in which I believe vou belied the poor fellow, which incenfed " me against him? He may thank you for all that hath happened; and so may I for the loss of a good servant, and one who probably had more merit than all of you. Poor fellow! I am charmed with his goodness to his parents. Why did you not tell me of that, but fuffer me to dismiss so good a creature without a character? I see the reaof fon of your whole behaviour now as well as your complaint; you was jealous of the wenches.' ' I jealous!' faid Slipflop; 'I affure you I look upon myfelf as his betters:

I am not meat for a footman I hope.' Thefe words threw the Lady into a violent passion. and the feat Slipflop from her prefence, whodeparted, toffing her nofe, and crying, Marry come up! there are fome people " more jealous than I, I believe.' Her Lady affected not to hear the words, though in reality she did, and understood them too. Now enfued a fecond conflict, so like the former, that it might favour of repetition to relate it minutely. It may fuffice to fay that Lady Booby found good reason to doubt whether the had to absolutely conquered her passion, as the had flattered herfelf; and, in order to accomplish it quite, took a resolution more common than wife, to retire immediately into the country. The reader hath long ago feen the arrival of Mrs Slipslop, whom no pertness could make her miltress resolve to part with; lately that of Mr Pounce, her forerunners; and, lastly, that of the Lady herfelf.

The morning after her arrival, being Sunday, she went to church, to the great surprise of every body, who wondered to see her Ladyship (being no very constant churchwoman) there, so suddenly upon her journey. Joseph was likewise there; and I have heard it was remarked, that she fixed her eyes on him much more than on the parson; but this I believeto be only a malicious rumour: When the prayers were ended, Mr Adams flood up, and with a loud voice pronounced, · I publish the banus of marriage between · Joseph Andrews and Frances Goodwill; both of this parish,' &c. Whether this had any effect on Lady Booby or no, whowas then in her pew, which the congregation could not fee into. I could never difcover: but certain it is, that in about a quarter of an hour she stood up, and directed her eyes to that part of the church where the women fat, and perfifted in looking that way during the remainder of the fermon, in fo ferutinizing a manner, and with fo angry acountenance, that most of the women were afraid the was offended at them.

$76 THE ADVENTURES OF

The moment she returned home, she sent for Slipslop into her chamber, and told her; She wondered what that impudent sellow Joseph did in that parish. Upon which Slipslop gave her an account of her meeting Adams with him on the road, and likewise the adventure with Fanny. At the relation of which, the Lady often changed her countenance; and when she had heard all, she ordered Mr Adams into her presence, to whom she behaved as the reader will see in the next chapter.

C .H H P. II.

A dialogue between Mr Abraham Adams and the Lady Booby.

R Adams was not far off; for he was drinking her Ladyship's health below, in a cup of her ale. He no sooner came before her, than she began in the following manner: ' I wonder, Sir, after the many e great obligations you have had to this fa-" mily,' (with all which the reader hath, in the course of this history, been minutely acquainted), ' that you will ungratefully show any respect to a sellow who hath been turned out of it for his misdeeds. Nor doth it, I can tell you, Sir, become a man. of your character, to run about the country with an idle fellow and wench. Indeed, as for the girl, I know no harm of her. · Slipflop tells me she was formerly bred up in my house, and behaved as she ought, till fhe hankered after this fellow, and he spoiled her. Nay, she may still perhaps do very well, if he will let her alone. You are therefore doing a monstrous thing, in endeavouring to procure a match between these two people, which will be to the ' ruin of them both.'- Madam,' fays Adams, ' if your Ladyship will but hear me fpeak, I protest I never heard any harm of Mr Joseph Andrews; if I had, I should have corrected him for it : for I never have nor will encourage the faults of those under my cure. As for the young woman, I affure your Ladyship, I have as good an opinion of her as your Ladyship yourself, or any other can have. She is the sweetesttempered, honestest, worthiest, young creature: indeed, as to her beauty, I do not commend her on that account, tho' all " men allow the is the handfomest woman; e gentle or femple, that ever appeared in the ' parish.' 'You are very impertinent,' says the, ' to talk such fulsome stuff to me. 4 is mighty becoming truly in a clergyman to trouble himfelf about handsome women: · and you are a delicate judge of beauty, no doubt. A man who hath lived all his life in fuch a parish as thisis a rare judge of beauty. Ridiculous! Beauty indeed !--- a country wench a beauty !--- I shall be sick whenever I hear beauty mentioned again ---- And fo 4 this wench is to flock the parish with beauties, I hope --- But, Sir, our poor is numes rous enough already; I will have no more vagabonds fettled here.' 'Madam,' fays Adams, ' your Ladyship is offended with me, I protest, without any reason. This couple were defirous to confummate long ago.

and I distuaded them from it: nay, I may wenture to fay, I believe I was the fole cause of their delaying it.' Well,' says she, ' and you did very wifely and honestly too, notwithstanding she is the greatest beauty in the parish.'---- And now, Madam, continued he, I only perform my office to Mr Joseph.' Pray, don't ' mister such fellows to me,' cries the Lady. " He,' faid the parson, ' with the consent of Fanny, before my face, put in the banns.'- -'Yes,' aniwered the Lady, 'I suppose the flut is forward enough; Slipflop tells me how her head runs upon fellows; that is one of her beauties, I suppose. But if they have put in the banns, I desire you will publish them no more without my orders.' ' Madam,' cries Adams, ' if any one puts in fufficient caution, and affigns a proper reafon against them, I am willing to surcease. 4 ---- I tell you a reason,' says she, ' he is a vagabond, and he shall not settle here, and bring a nest of beggars into the parish; it will make us but little amends that they will be beauties.' 'Madam,' answered Adams, with the utmost submission to your Ladyship, I have been informed by Lawyer Scout, that any person who serves a year, gains fettlement in the parish where he ' ferves.' 'Lawyer Scout,' replied the Lady,

.180 THE ADVENTURES OF

is an impudent coxcomb; I will have no Lawyer Scout interfere with me. I repeat to you again, I will have no more incumbrances brought on us: fo I defire ' you will proceed no farther.' ' Madam.' returned Adams, 'I would obey your Ladythip in every thing that is lawful; but furely the parties being poor is no reason against their marrying. God forbid there should be any fuch law. The poor have little · share enough of this world already: it would be barbarous indeed to deny them the common privileges and innocent enjoyments which nature indulges to the animal creation.' Since you understand your-· felf no better,' cries the Lady, ' nor the refpect due from fuch as you to a woman of · my distinction, than to affront my ears by I fuch loofe discourse, I shall mention but one short word; it is my orders to you, that you publish these banns no more; and if you dare, I will recommend it to your ' master, the doctor, to discard you from his fervice, I will, Sir, notwithstanding your opoor family; and then you and the greatest · beauty in the parish may go and beg toegether.' ' Madam,' answered Adams, ' I . know not what your Ladyship means by the terms master and service. I am in the fervice of a master who will never discard * me for doing my duty: and if the doctor for indeed I have never been able to pay * for a licence) thinks proper to turn me * from my cure, God will provide me, I hope, another. At least, my family, as well as myself, have hands; and he will ' prosper, I doubt not, our endeavours to get our bread honestly with them. my conscience is pure, I shall never fear what man can do unto me.'--- I condemn " my humility,' faid the Lady, ' for demeaning myfelf to converse with you so long. I shall take other measures; for I see you are a confederate with them. But the fooner you leave me the better; and I shall s give orders that my doors may no longer be open to you. I will fuffer no parsons who run about the country with beauties, to be entertained here.'--- 'Madam,' faid Adams, ' I shall enter into no person's doors against their will: but I am assured, when you have enquired farther into this matter, you will applaud, not blame my proceeding; and fo I humbly take my leave:' which he did with many bows, or at least many attempts at a bow.

Vol. II.

#$2 THE ADVENTURES OF

C H A P. III.

What passed between the Lady and Lawyer Scout.

IN the afternoon the Lady fent for Mr Scout, whom she attacked most violently for intermeddling with her fervants: which he denied, and indeed with truth; for he had only afferted accidentally, and perhaps rightly, that a year's fervice gained a fettlement'; and fo far he owned he might have formerly informed the parson, and believed it was law. I am resolved,' said the Lady, ' to have no discarded fervants of mine settled here; and fo, if this be your law, I shall fend to anos ther lawyer.' Scout faid, 'If she sent to a hundred lawyers, not one or all of them could alter the law. The utmost that was in the power of a lawyer, was to prevent the law's taking effect; and that he him felf could do for her Ladyship as well as any other: and I believe,' fays he, ' Madam, · your Ladyship not being conversant in . these matters, hath mistaken a difference: of for I afferted only, that a man who ferved a year was fettled. Now there is a mate-' rial difference between being fettled in law and fettled in fact; and as I affirmed generally he was fettled, and law is preferable to fact, my settlement must be understood in law, and not in fact. And suppose, · Madam, we admit he was fettled in law, what use will they make of it? how doth that relate to fact? He is not settled infact; and if he be not settled in fact, he is onot an inhabitant; and if he is not an inhabitant, he is not of this parish; and then undoubtedly he ought not to be publishedhere: for Mr Adams hath told me your Ladyship's pleasure, and the reason, which; is a very good one, to prevent burdening us with the poor; we have too many already; and I think we ought to have an · act to hang or transport half of them. we can prove in evidence, that he is not fettled in fact, it is another matter. What I faid to Mr Adams, was on a supposition that he was fettled in fact; and indeed if that was the cafe, I should doubt'--- Don't tell me your facts and your ifs,' faid the Lady, 'I don't understand your gibberish: vou take too much upon you, and are very impertinent in pretending to direct in this e parith, and you thall be taught better, I. affure you, you shall. But as to the wench, I am resolved the shall not settle here: I will not suffer such beauties as these to produce children for us to keep.'--- Beauties -indeed! your Ladyship is pleased to be:

merry,'-- answered Scout.---- Mr Adams described her so to me,' said the Lady .---- Pray what fort of dowdy is it, " Mr Scout?'---- The uglieft creature almost I ever beheld; a poor dirty drab, ' your Ladyship never faw such a wretch.'---Well, but dear Mr Scout, let her be what fhe will, ---- these ugly women will bring children you know; so that we must pre-' vent the marriage.' -- ' True, Madam,' replied Scout, ' for the subsequent marriage co-operating with the law, will carry law into fact; when a man is married, he is fettled in fact: and then he is not removeable. I will fee Mr Adams and I make no doubt of prevailing with him. His only objection is, doubtless, that he shall lose his · fee; but that being once made easy, as it ' shall be, I am confident no farther objection will remain. No, no, it is impossible: but your Ladyship can't discommend his unwillingness to depart from his fee. Every s man ought to have proper value for his As to the matter in question, if your fee. Ladyship pleases to employ me in it, I will venture to promise you success. The laws of this land are not so vulgar, to permit a mean fellow to contend with one of your ' Ladyship's fortune. We have one sure card, which is to carry him before Justice

Frolie, who, upon hearing your Ladyship's s name, will commit him without any farther questions. As for the dirty slut, we shall have nothing to do with her; for if we get ! rid of the fellow, the ugly jade will' --- ' Take what measures you please, good Mr Scout, answered the Lady, but I wish you could rid the parish of both; for Slipshop tells me. fuch fories of this wench, that I abhor the thoughts of her; and though you fay she s is such an ugly flut, yet you know, dear Mr Scout, these forward creatures who ' run after men, will always find fome as forward as themselves: so that, to prevent the increase of beggars, we must get rid of her'---' Your Ladyship is very much in the right, answered Scout, but I am afraid the law is a little deficient in giving usany fuch power of prevention; however, the Justice will stretchit as far as he is able to oblige your Ladyship. To say truth, it is a great bleffing to the country that he is in the commission; for he hath taken several poor off our hands that the law-would e never lay hold on. I know fome justices who make as much of committing a man to Bridewell, as his Lordihip at fize would of hanging him; but it would do a man good to see his worship, our Justice, commit a fellow to Bridewell; he takes fo

• much pleasure in it: and when once we ha' um there, we seldom hear any more o' um. He's either starved or see up by vermin in a month's time.'--Here the arrival of a visitor put an end to the conversation, and Mr Scout having undertaken the eause, and promised it success, departed.

This Scout was one of those fellows who. without any knowledge of the law, or being bred to it, take upon them, in defiance of an act of parliament, to act as lawyers in the country, and are called fo. They are the pelts of fociety, and a feandal to a profession. to which indeed they do not belong; and which owes to fuch kind of rufcallions the ill-will which weak persons bear towards it. With this fellow, to whom a little before the would not have condescended to have spoken, did a certain passion for Joseph, and the jealoufy and difdain of poor innocent Fanny, betray the Lady Booby into a familiar difcourse, in which she inadvertently confirmed, many hints, with which Slipflop, whose gallant he was, had pre-acquainied him; and whence he had taken an opportunity to affert those severe falsehoods of little Fanny, which possibly the reader might not have been well able to account for, if we had not thought proper to give him this information.

C H A P. IV.

A short chapter, but very full of matter; particularly the arrival of Mr Booby and his Lady.

LL that night, and the next day, the Lady Booby paffed with the utmost anxiety; her mind was distracted, and her foul toffed up and down by many turbulent and opposite passions. She loved, hated, pitied, scorned, admired, despised the same perfons by fits, which changed in a very short interval. On Tuesday morning, which happened to be a holiday, the went to church, where, to her furprise, Mr Adams published the banns again, with as audible a voice as before. It was lucky for her that as there was no fermon, she had an immediate opportunity of returning home to vent her rage, which she could not have concealed from the congregation five minutes; indeed it was not then very numerous, the affembly confishing of no more than Adams, his clerk, his wife, the Lady, and one of her fervants. At her return the met Slipflop, who accosted her in these words: -- 'O Meam, what doth your Ladyship think? To be sirre Lawyer Scout hath carried Joseph and Fanny both before the Justice. All the parish are in tears, and fay they will certainly be hanged: for ono body knows what it is for .- ;- I suppose ' they deserve it,' fays the Lady. ' What dost thou mention such wretches to me? O dear Madam,' answered Slipslop, ' is it onot a pity fuch a graceless young man ' should die a virulent death? I hope the judge will take commensuration on his youth. As for Fanny, I don't think it fig-' nifies much what becomes of her; and if opoor Joseph hath done any thing, I could venture to swear she traduced him in it: ' few men ever come to fragrant punishment, but by those nasty creatures, who are a ' scandal to our sect.' The Lady was no more pleafed at this news, after a moment's reflection, than Slipflop herfelf: for though she wished Fanny far enough, she did not defire the removal of Joseph, especially with her. She was puzzled how to act, or what to fay on this occasion, when a coach and fix drove into the court, and a fervant acquainted her with the arrival of her mephew Booby and his Lady. She ordered them to be conducted into a drawing-room, whither fhe presently repaired, having composed her countenance as well as she could; and being a little fatisfied that the wedding would, by these means, be at least interrupted, and that the should have an opportunity to execute any resolution she might take, for which she saw herself provided with an excellent instrument in Scout.

The Lady Booby apprehended her fervant had made a mistake, when he mentioned Mr Booby's lady: for the had never heard of his marriage: but how great was her furprife, when, at her entering the room, her nephew presented his wife to her, faying, ' Madam, this is that charming Pamela, of whom I am convinced you have heard fo much." The Lady received her with more civility than he expected: indeed with the utmost: for the was perfectly polite, nor had any vice inconfistent with good-breeding. They pasfed some little time in ordinary discourse. when a fervant came and whilpered Mr Booby, who prefently told the ladies, he must desert them a little on some business of consequence; and as their discourse during his absence would afford little improvement or ontertainment to the reader, we will leave them for a while to attend Mr Booby.

C H A P. V.

Containing Justice-business: curious precedents of depositions, and other matters necessary to be perused by all justices of the peace and their clerks.

HE young Squire and his Lady were no fooner alighted from their coach, than the fervants began to enquire after Mr Joseph, from whom, they said, their Lady had not heard a word, to her great surprise; since he had left Lady Booby's. Upon this they were instantly informed of what had lately happened, with which they hastily acquainted their master; who took an immediate resolution to go himself, and endeavous to restore his Pamela her brother, before the even knew she had lost him.

The Justice, before whom the criminals were carried, and who lived within a short mile of the Lady's house, was luckily Mn Booby's acquaintance, by his having an estate in his neighbourhood. Ordering therefore his horses to his coach, he set out for the judgment-seat, and arrived when the Justice had almost sinished his business. He was conducted into a hall, where he was acquainted that his Worship would wait on him in a moment; for he had only a man and a woman to commit to Bridewell first. As he was now convinced he had not a mi-, nute to lofe, he infifted on the fervants introducing him directly into the room where the Justice was then executing his office, as he called it. Being brought thither, and the first compliments being passed between the Squire and his Worship, the former asked the latter what crime these two young-people had been guilty of. 'No great crime,' anfwered the Justice; I have only ordered them to Bridewell for a month.' what is their crime?' repeated the Squire. Larceny, an't please your Honour,' says Scout. 'Ay,' fays the Justice, ' a kind of felonious larcenous thing. I believe I must order them a little correction too, a little I stripping and whipping." (Poor Fanny, who had hitherto supported all with the thoughts of Joseph's company, trembled at that found; but indeed without reason, for none but the devil himself would have executed fuch a fentence on her.) 'Still,' faid the Squire, I am ignorant of the crime, the fact I mean.' Why, there it is in peaper,' answered the Justice, shewing him a deposition, which, in absence of his clerk, he had writ himself, of which we have with great difficulty procured an authentic copy; and here it follows verbatim et literatim.

191

The deputition of James Scout layer, and Thomas Trotter, yeoman, taken before me, one of his Mageesty's justalles of the piece for Zumersetshire.

THESE deponants faith, and first Thomas Trotter for himself faith, that of this instant October, being Sabhath-day, between the ours of 2 and 4 in the afternoon, he zeed Joseph Andrews and Francis Goodwill walk akrofs a cer-* tane felde belunging to Layer Scout, and out of the path which ledes thru the faid felde, and there he zede Joseph Andrews with a nife cut one hafel twig, of the va-· lue, as he believes, of 3 half-pence, or thereabouts; and he faith, that the faid Francis Goodwill was likewife walking on the grass out of the said path in the said felde, and did receive and karry in her · hand the faid twig, and fo was comfarting, eading and abating to the faid Joseph threin. And the faid James Scout for himself says, that he verily believes the faid twig to be his own proper twig,' &c.

' Jesu!' faid the Squire, ' would you commit two persons to Bridewell for a " twig?" 'Yes,' faid the lawyer, ' and with great lenity too; for if we had called it a * young tree, they would have been both ' hanged.'- 'Harkee,' fays the Justice, taking afide the Squire, 'I thould not have been fo · fevere on this occasion, but Lady Booby defires to get them out of the parish; fo · Lawyer Scout will give the constable orders to let them run away if they please; but it feems they intend to marry together, and the Lady bath no other means, as they are · legally fettled there, to prevent their bringing an incumbrance on her own parith. Well,' faid the Squire, 'I will take care · my aunt shall be fatisfied in this point; ' and likewife I promise you, Joseph here fhall never be an incumbrance on her. fhall be obliged to you, therefore, if, inflead of Bridewell, you would commit them ' to my custody.'-- O to be sure, Sir, if · you defire it, answered the Justice; and without more ado, Joseph and Fanny were delivered over to Squire Booby, whom Jo-'feph very well knew; but little gueffed how nearly he was related to him. The Justice burnt his mittimus: the constable was fent about his business; the lawyer made no complaint for want of justice; and the prisoners, with exulting hearts, gave a thousand thanks to his honour Mr Booby, who did not intend their obligations to him should cease here; for ordering his man to produce a or. 11.

cloak-bag, which he had caused to be brought from Lady Booby's on purpose, he defired the Justice that he might have Joseph with him into a room; where ordering his fervant to take out a fuit of his own clothes. with linen and other necessaries, he left tofeph to drefs himfelf, who not yet knowing the cause of all this civility, excused his accepting fuch a favour, as long as decently he Whilft Joseph was dresling, the Squire repaired to the Justice, whom he found talking with Fanny; for during the examination, she had slopped her hat over her eyes, which were also bathed in tears, and had by that means concealed from his Worship what might perhaps have rendered the arrival of Mr Booby unnecessary, at least for herself. The Justice no sooner saw her countenance ·cleared up, and her bright eyes shining thro' her tears, than he fecretly curfed himfelf for having once thought of Bridewell for her. He would willingly have fent his own wife thither, to have had Fanny in her place: and conceiving almost at the fame instant defires and schemes to accomplish them, he employed the minutes while the Squire was absent with Joseph, in affuring her how forry he was for having treated her fo roughly before he knew her merit; and told her, that fince Lady Booby was unwilling that the should fettle in her parish, she was heartily welcome to his, where she promised her his protection, adding, that he would take Joseph and her into his own family, if she liked; which assurance he confirmed with a squeeze by the haid. She thanked him very kindly, and said, 'She would acquaint Joseph with the 'offer, which he would certainly be glad to 'accept; for that Lady Booby was angry 'with them both, though she did not know 'either had done any thing to offend her: but imputed it to Madam Slipshop who had 'always been her enemy.'

The Squire now returned, and prevented any farther continuance of this conversation; and the Justice, out of a pretended respect to his guest, but, in reality, from an apprehension of a rival, (for he knew nothing of his marriage), ordered Fanny into the kitchen, whither she gladly retired; nor did the Squire, who declined the trouble of explaining the whole matter, oppose it.

It would be unnecessary, if I was able, which indeed I am not, to relate the convertation between these two gentlemen, which volled, as I have been informed, entirely on the subject of horse-racing. Joseph was soon dressed in the plainest dress he could find, which was a blue coat and breeches, with a gold edging, and a red waistcoat with the fame; and as this fuit, which was rather too large for the Squire, exactly fitted him, for he became it so well, and looked so genteel, that no person would have doubted its beings as well adapted to his quality as his shape; nor have suspected, as one might, when may Lord —, or Sir----, or Mr---- appear in lace or embroidery, that the tailor's man wore those clothes home on his back, which he should have carried under his arm.

The Squire now took leave of the Justice. and calling for Fanny, made her and loseph, against their wills, get into the coach with him, which he then ordered to drive to Lady Booby's .-- It had moved a fewyards only, when the Squire asked Joseph, if he knew who that man was croffing the field; for, added he. I never faw one take fuch itrides before. Joseph answered eagerly, 'O Sir, it ' is Parson Adams.'---' O la, indeed, and so it is,' faid Fanny; ' poor man, he is coming to do what he could for us. Well, he ' is the worthiest best-natured creature.'----' Ay,' faid Joseph, ' Gon bless him, for there is not such another in the universe. ' The best creature living sure,' cries Fanny, ' Is he?' fays the Squire; ' then I am refolved to have the best creature living in my coach; and fo faying, he ordered it to ftop, whilft Joseph, at his request, hollowed to the Parson, who well knowing his voice, made all the hafte imaginable, and foon came up with them. He was defired by the master. who could fearce refrain from laughter at his figure, to mount into the coach, which he with many thanks refused, saying, He could walk by its fide, and he'd warrant he'd keep up with it: but he was at length over prevailed on. The Squire now acquainted Jofeph with his marriage; but he might have spared himself that labour; for his servant, whilft Joseph was dreffing, had performed that office before. He continued to express the vait happpiness he enjoyed in his fifter, and the value he had for all who belonged to her. Joseph made many bows, and exprefied as many acknowledgments; and Parfon Adams, who now first perceived Joseph's new apparel; burit into tears with joy, an I fell to rubbing his hands, and fnapping his fangers, as if he had been mad.

They were now arrived at the Lady Booby's, and the Squire, defiring them to wait a moment in the court, walked in to his aunt, and calling her out from his wife, acquainted her with Joseph's arrival; faying,

Madam, as I have married a virtuous and worthy woman, I am refolved to own her relations, and fhew them all proper respect;

· I shall think myself therefore infinitely ob-

R 3.

It is true, her brother hath been your fervant, but he is now become my brother;
and I have one happiness, that neither his character, his behaviour, or appearance, give, me any reason to be ashamed of calling him so. In short, he is now below, dressed like a gentleman, in which light I intend he shall hereaster be seen: and you will oblige me beyond expression, if you will admit him to be of our party; for I know it will give great pleasure to my wise, though the will not mention it." This was a stroke of fortune beyond the Lady Booby's hopes or expectation; she anfwered him eagerly, 'Nephew, you know how easily I am prevailed on to do any thing which Joseph Andrews desires .- Phoo, I mean which you defire me; and as he is 'now your relation, I cannot refuse to en-tertain him as such.' The Squire told her, he knew his obligation to her for her compliance; and going three steps, returned, and told her, ---he had one more favour, which he believed she would easily grant, as she had accorded him the former. 'There is a young woman'--- 'Nephew,' fays she, 'don't let my good nature make you defire, as is too commonly the case, to impose on me; nor think, because I have, with so much condescension, agreed to suffer your brother-in-law to come to my table, that I will submit to the company of all my own fervants, and all the dirty trollops in the ' country.' ' Madam,' answered the Squire, I believe you never faw this young creature. I never beheld fuch sweetness and innocence, joined with fuch beauty, and withal ' fo genteel.' 'Upon my foul, I won't ad-' mit her,' replied the Lady in a passion; the whole world than't prevail on me. resent even the desire as an affront, and'-The Squire, who knew her inflexibility, interrupted her, by asking pardon, and promifing not to mention it more. He then returned to Joseph, and she to Pamela. He took loseph aside, and told him he would carry him to his fifter; but could not prevail as yet for Fanny. Joseph begged that he might see his filter alone, and then be with his Fanny; but the Squire, knowing the pleasure his wife would have in her brother's company, would not admit it, telling Joseph there would be nothing in so short an absence from Fanny, whilit he was affured of her fafety; adding, he hoped he could not eafily quit a fifter whom he had not feen fo long, and who fo tenderly loved him .--- Joseph immediately complied: for, indeed, no brother could love a fifter more; and recommending Fanny, who rejoiced that she was not to go before Lady Booby, to the care of Mr Adams, he attended the Squire up stairs, whilst Fanny repaired with the Parson to his house, where she thought herself secure of a kind reception.

C. H. A. P. VI.

Of which you are defined to read no more than you like.

HE meeting between Joseph and Pamela was not without tears of joy on both fides: and their embraces were full of tenderness and affection. They were however regarded with much more pleafure by the nephew than by the aunt, to whose flame they were fuel only; and being affilled by the addition of dress, which was indeed not wanted to fet off the lively colours in which-Nature had drawn health, strength, comelineis, and youth. In the afternoon Joseph. at their request, entertained them with an account of his adventures; nor could Lady Booby conceal her distatisfaction at those parts in which Fanny was concerned, especially when Mr Booby launched forth intofuch rapturous praises of her beauty. Shefaid, applying to her niece, that the wondered her nephew, who had pretended to marry for love, should think such a subject proper to amuse his wife with; adding, that for her part, she should be jealous of a husband who fpoke so warmly in praise of another woman. Pamela answered, indeed she thought she had cause: but it was an instance of Mr Booby's aptness to see more beauty in women than they were miltreffes of. At which words both the women fixed their eyes on two looking-glasses; and Lady Booby replied, that men were, in the general, very ill judges of beauty; and then, whilst both contemplated only their own faces, they paid a cross compliment to each other's charms. When the hour of rest approached, which the lady of the house deferred as long as decently the could, the informed Joseph (whom for the future we shall call Mr Joseph, he having as good a title to that appellation as many others, I mean that incontested one of good clothes) that she had ordered a bed to be provided for him. He declined this fayour to his utmost; for his heart had long been with his Fanny; but she insisted on his accepting it, alledging, that the parish had no proper accommodation for fuch a person as he was now to esteem himself. The Squire and his lady both joining with her, Mr Jofeph was at last forced to give over his defign of vifiting Fanny that evening, who, on her fide, as impatiently expected him till midnight, when, in complaifance to Mr Adams's family, who had fat up two hours out of refipedt to her, the retired to bed, but not to fleep; the thought of her love kept her waking, and his not returning according to his promife, filled her with uneafiness, of which, however, the could not affign, any other cause than merely that of being absent from him.

Mr Joseph rose early in the morning, and visited her in whom his soul delighted. She no sooner heard his voice in the parson's parsour, than the leapt from her bed, and dressing herself in a few minutes, went down to him. They passed two hours with mexpressible har piness together, and then having appointed Monday, by Mr Adams's permitsion, for their marriage, Mr Joseph returned according to his promise, to breakfast at the Lady Booby's, with whose behaviour since the evening we shall now acquaint the reader.

She wasno fooner retired to her chamber; than the asked Slipslop what the thought of this wonderful creature her nephew had married. 'Madam!' faid Slipslop, not yet fufficiently understanding what answer the was to make. 'I ask you,' answered the Lady, 'what you think of the dowdy, my niece; I think I am to call her?' Slipslop wanting no farther hint, began to pull her to pieces, and so miserably defaced her, that it would have been impossible for any one to have known the perion. The Lady gave her all the affiliance she could, and ended with saying,- 'I think, Slipflop, you have done her ' justice; but yet, bad as she is, she is an anel compared to this Fanny.' Slipflop then fell on Fanny, whom the hacked and hewed in the like barbarous manner, concluding with an observation, that there was always fomething in those low-life creatures. which must eternally distinguish them from ' Really,' faid the Lady, their betters. I think there is one exception to your rule: I am certain you may guess who I mean.' 'Not I, upon my word, Madam,' faid Slipflop .- I mean a young fellow; fure * you are the dullest wretch,' said the Lady. · ----Yes, truly, Madam, he is an accession, answered Slipflop.,---- Ay, is he not, Slipflop?' returned the Lady. ' Is he not fo genteel, that a prince * might without a bluth acknowledge him for his fon? His behaviour is such, that would not shame the best education. · borrows from his flation a condescension in every thing to his superiors, yet unat-* tended by that mean fervility which is cal-· led good behaviour in fuch perfons. Every thing he doth, hath no mark of the base motive of fear, but visibly shows some re fpect and gratitude, and carries with it the perfuation of love .--- And then for his virfues; fuch piety to his parents, fuch tender s affection to his lifter, such integrity in his ' friendship, such bravery, such goodness, that if he had been born a gentleman, his wife would have polleffed the most invaluable bleffing '--' To be fure, Ma'am,' faid Slipflop .-- 'But as he is,' answered the Lady, if he had a thousand more good qualities, it must render a woman of fashion con-4 temptible even to be suspected of thinking of him; yes, I should despise myself for fuch a thought.' 'To be fure, Ma'am,'.. faid Slipflop. 'And why to be fure?' replied the Lady; 'thou art always one's echo. Is he not more worthy of affection than a dirty country clown, though born of a family as old as the flood, or an idle worth-· less rake, or little puisne beau of quality? · And yet these we must condemn ourselves to, in order to avoid the censure of the world: to shun the contempt of others, we ' must ally ourselves to those we despise; we must prefer birth, title, and fortune to real merit. It is a tyranny of custom, a tyranny we must comply with; for we people of fashion are the slaves of custom.' 'Marry * come up!' faid Slipflop, who now well knew which party to take, "if I was a woman of vour Ladyship's fortune and quality, I would be a flave to nobody.' 'Me,' faid the Lady, 'I am speaking if a young wo-' man of fashion, who had feen nothing of * the world, should happen to like such a fellow .--- Me, indeed! I hope thou dost not 's imagine' ...... 'No, Ma'am, to be fure,' cries Slipflop'--- 'No! what no?' cries the Lady. Thou art always ready to answer, before thou haft heard one. So far I must allow * he is a charming fellow. Me, indeed! No, Slipflop, all thoughts of men are over with me. I have lost a husband whobut if I should reflect, I should run mad .--My future ease must depend upon forgetfulness. Slipslop, let me hear some of thy nonsense to turn my thoughts another way. What doft think of Mr Andrews?' 'Why, I think,' fays Slipflop, 'he is the handfomelt, most properest man I ever faw; and if I was a lady of the greatest degree it would be well for some folks. Your Ladyship * may talk of custom if you please; but I am confidous there is no more comparison between young Mr Andrews, and most of the young gentlemen who come to your Ladyship's house in London; a parcel of whipper-fnapper sparks: I would sooner Vol. II.

★66 THE ADVENTURES OF

4 marry our old Parfon Adams: never tell me what people fay, whilst I am happy in the arms of him I love. Some folks rail against other folks, because other folks have what some folks would be glad of --- 'And ' fo.' answered the Lady, ' if you was a wo-• man of condition, you would really marry
• Mr Andrews? --- Yes, I affure your Lady fhip,' replied Slipflop, if he would have me.'---' Fool, idiot,' cries the Lady, ' if he would have a woman of fashion! Is that a question?' 'No truly, Madam,' faid Slipflop. I believe it would be none if Fanny was out of the way; and I am confidous if I was in your Ladyship's place, and liked 4 Mr Joseph Andrews, she should not stay in the parish a moment. I am sure Lawyer · Scout would fend her packing, if your Ladyship would but say the word.' This last speech of Slipslop raised a tempest in the mind of her mistress. She feared Scout had betraved her, or rather that she had betraved herself. After some silence, and a double change of her complexion, first to pale, and then to red, the spoke thus: 'I am astonished 4 at the liberty you give your tongue. Would vou infinuate, that I employed Scout against this wench on the account of the fellow? . La, Ma'am,' faid Slipslop, frighted out of her * wits, 'Inflaffinate fuch a thing!' I think you

" dare not,' answered the Lady. 'I believe my conduct may defy malice itself to affert for s cursed a slander. If I had ever discovered any wantonness, any lightness in my behaviour: if I had followed the example of fome whom thou halt, I believe, feen, in 4 allowing myself indecent liberties, even with a husband: but the dear man who is. gone,' (here she began to sob) was he alive again, (then she produced tears) couldnot upbraid me with any one act of tendernels or passion. No, Slipslop, all the time i cohabited with him, he never obtained even a kis from me, without my expressing reluctance in the granting of it. I am sure he himself never suspected how much I loved him- Since his death, thou knowest, though it is almost fix weeks (it wants but a day) ago, I have not admitted one vifitor, till this fool my nephew arrived. I have confined s myself quite to one party of friends. " And can such a conduct as this fear to bearraigned? to be accused not only of a paffion which I have always definited, but of fixing it on fuch an object, a creature fo much beneath my notice?"---- Upon 'my word, Ma'am,' fays Slipflop, 'I do ! not understand your Ladyship, nor know I any thing of the matter.' I believe indeed thou doll not understand me.---' Those are delicacies which exist only in superior minds; thy coarse ideas cannot comprehend them. Thou art a low creature. of the Andrews breed, a reptile of a lower order, a weed that grows in the common. garden of the creation.'- I affure your Ladythip, fays Slipflop, whose passions were almost of as high an order as her Lady's. 'I have no more to do with Common Garden than other folks. Really, your Ladyfhip talks of fervants as if they were not born of the Christian specious. Servants · have flesh and blood as well as quality; and Mr Andrews himself is a proof that they have as good, if not better. ' my own part, I can't perceive my Dears * are coarier than other people's; I am fure if Mr Andrews was a dear of mine. I should ' not be ashamed of him in company with gentlemen; for whoever hath feen him in. his new clothes, must confess he looks as much like a gentleman as any body. Coarfe, quotha! I can't bear to hear the poor young ' fellow run down neither: for I will fat ' this, I never heard him fay an ill word of any body in his life. I am fure his coarfe-· ness doth not ly in his heart; for he is the best-natur'd man in the world; and as for-his fkin, it was no coarfer than other people's, I am fure. His bofom, when a boy, was as white as driven fnow; and, where it is not covered with hairs, is fo still. Ifakins! if I was Mr'Andrews, with a hun-"dred a-year, I should not envy the best she who wears a head. A woman that could onot be happy with fuch a man, ought never to be for for if he can't make a woman. happy, I never yet beheld the man who could. I say again, I wish I was a great · lady for his fake; I believe when I had made a gentleman of him, he'd behave for that nobody should deprecate what I had done; and I fancy few would venture to tell him he was no gentleman to his face, nor to mine neither.' At which words. taking up the candles, she asked her mistress, who had been fome time in her bed, if the had any further commands; who mildly answered the had none; and telling her the was a comical creature, bid her good night.

* Meaning perhaps ideas.

C H A P. VII.

Philosophical reflections, the like not to be found in any light French romance. Mr Booby's grave advice to Joseph, and Fanny's encounter with a beau.

TABIT, my good reader, hath so vast a prevalence over the human mind, that there is scarce any thing too strange or too. strong to be afferted of it. The story of the. miser, who from long accustoming to cheat others, came at last to cheat himself, and with great delight and triumph picked his own pocket of a guinea to convey to his hoard, is: not impossible or improbable. In like manner it fares with the practicers of deceit, who, from having long deceived their acquain+ tance, gain at last a power of deceiving themfelves, and acquire that very opinion (however false) of their own abilities, excellence. and virtues, into which they have for years perhaps endeavoured to betray their neighbours. Now, reader, to apply this observation to my. present purpose, thou must know, that as the passion generally called love, exercises most of the talents of the female or fair world; fo in. this they now and then discover a small inclination to deceit; for which thou wilt not be angry with the beautiful creatures, when thou, half confidered, that at the age of feven, or fomething earlier, Miss is instructed by her mother, that mafter is a very monstrous kind of animal, who will, if the fuffers him to come too near her, infallibly eat her up, and grind her to pieces. That fo far from kiffing or toying with him of her own accord, the must not admit him to toy or kiss with her. And lastly, that she must never have any affection towards.him: for, if the thould, all her friends in petticoats would esteem her a traitress. point at her, and hunt her out of their focie-These impressions being first received; are farther and deeper inculcated by their school-mistresses and companions: so that by the age of ten they have contracted fuch a dread and abhorrence of the above named monster, that, whenever they see him, they fly from him as the innocent have doth from the greyhound. Hence, to the age of fourteen or fifteen, they entertain a mighty antipathy to master; they resolve, and frequently profess, that they will never have any commerce with him, and entertain fond hopes of passing their lives out of his reach, of the postfibility of which they have so visible an example in their good maiden aunt. But when they arrive at this period, and have now paffed their fecond climacteric, when their wifdom, grown riper, begins to fee a little farther, and from almost daily falling in master's. way, to apprehend the great difficulty of keep. ing out of it; and when they observe him look often at them, and fometimes very eagerly and earnestly too, (for the monster feldomtakes any notice of them till at this age) they then begin to think of their danger; and as they perceive they cannot eafily avoid him, the wifer part bethink themselves of providing by other means for their fecurity. They endeavour by all the methods they can inventto render themselves so amiable in his eyes. that he may have no inclination to hurt them; in which they generally succeed sowell, that his eyes, by frequent languishing, foon lessen their idea of his fierceness, and so far abate their fears, that they venture to parly with him; and when they perceive him fo different from what he hath been described. all gentleness, softness, kindness, tenderness, fondness, their dreadful apprehensions vanish in a moment; and now, (it being usual with the human mind to tkip from one extreme to its opposite, as easily, and almost as suddenly. as a bird from one bough to another;) leve instantly succeeds to fear. But as it happens so persons who have in their infancy been thoroughly frightened with certain no-perfons called ghofts, that they retain their dread of those beings, after they are convinced that there are no fuch things; fo these young ladies, though they no longer apprehend devouring, cannot so entirely shake off all that hath been instilled into them; they still entertain the idea of that censure which was so grouply imprinted on their tender minds, to which the declarations of abhorrence they every day hear from their companions greatly contributed. To avoid this censure therefore. is now their only care; for which purpole they still pretend the same aversion to the monster; and the more they love him, the more ardently they counterfeit the antipathy. By the continual and constant practice of which deceit on others, they at length impose on themselves, and really believe they hate what they love. Thus indeed it happened to lady Booby, who loved Joseph long before the knew it; and now loved him much more than she suspected. She had indeed, from the time of his fifter's arrival in the quality of her niece, and from the inflant she viewed him in the dress and character of a gentleman, begun to conceive fecretly a defign which love had concealed from herfelf, till a dream betrayed it to her.

"JOSEPH ANDREWS!" 213

JOSEPH ANDREWS. 2.2

She had no sooner rises than she sent for her nephew; when he came to her, after many compliments on his choice, she told him, He might perceive in her condescension.

to admit her own fervant to her table, that the looked on the family of Andrews as his relations, and indeed hers; that as he had. married into fuch a family, it became him to endeavour by all methods to raife it as much as possible. At length the advised him to use all his art to diffuade Joseph from his in-'tended match, which would still enlarge their relation to meanness and poverty: concluding, that by a commission in the army, or some other genteel employment, he might foon put young Mr Andrews on the foot of a gentleman; and that being once done, his accomplishments might quickly gain him an alliance, which-would not be to their difcredit. Her nephew heartily embraced this proposal; and finding Mr Joseph with his wise, at his return to her chamber, he immediately began thus: 'My love to my dear Pamela, brother, will extend to all her relations; nor fhall I shew them less respect than if I had married into the family of a Duke. I hope I have given you some early testimonies of this, and shall continue to give you daily more. You will excuse me therefore, brother, if my concern for your interest makes me mention what may be, perhaps, disagreeable to you to hear: but I must insist upon it, that if you have any value for my salliance or my friendship, you will decline any thoughts of engaging farther with a girl, who is, as you are a relation of mine, 's fo much beneath you. I know there may be at first some difficulty in your compliance, but that will daily diminish; and you will in the end fincerely thank me for my advice. ' I own, indeed, the girl is handsome: but beauty alone is a poor ingredient, and will ' make but on uncomfortable marriage.' ' Sir,' faid Joseph, ' I assure you her beauty is her least perfection; nor do I know a virtue which that young creature is not opossessed of.' As to her virtues,'answered Mr Booby, ' you can be yet but a slender sjudge of them: but if she had never so many, you will find her equal in these among her superiors in birth and fortune. which now you are to esteem on a footing with yourself; at least I will take care they fhall shortly be so, unless you prevent me by degrading yourfelf with such a match; a match I have hardly patience to think of: and which would break the hearts of who now rejoice in the expectation of feeing you make a figure in the world.' 'I know not,' replied Joseph, that my parents have any power over my inclinations; nor am I obliged to facrifice my happiness to their whim or ambition: besides, I shall be very forry to see, that the sunexpected advancement of my fifter should fo fuddenly inspire them with this wicked pride, and make them despise their equals, I am resolved on no account to quit my dear Fanny, no, though I could raise her as high above her present station as you ' have railed my fifter.' Your fifter, as well as myfelf,' faid Booby, ' are greatly obliged to you for the comparison: but, Sir, she is not worthy to be compared in beauty to my Pamela; nor hath the half her merit. And besides, Sir, as you civilly throw my marriage with your fifter in my teeth, I must teach you the witle difference between us: my fortune enabled me to please myself; and it would have been as overgrown a folly in me to have omitted it, as in you to do it.' 'My fortune enables " me to pleafe myself likewise,' said Joseph: for all my pleasure is centred in Fanny; and whilft I have health, I shall be able to fupport her with my labour in that station to which she was born, and with which she ' is content.' ' Brother,' said Pamela, ' Mr Booby advises you as a friend; and, no doubt, my papa and mamma will be of his opinion, and will have great reason to be angry with you for delitroying what his goodness hath done, and throwing down our family again, after he hath raifed it.

JOSEPH ANDREWS. 21

JOSEPH ANDREWS. 217

It would become you better, brother, to * pray for the affiltance of grace against such s a passion than to indulge it .--- Sure, sister, ' you are not in earnest; I am sure she is your 'equal at least.' She was my equal,' answered Pamela, ' but I am no longer Pamela Andrews, I am now this gentleman's lady, and as fuch am above her--- I hope I ' shall never behave with an unbecoming oride: but at the fame time, I shall always f endeavour to know myfelf, and question ' not the affiftance of grace to that purpofe,' They were now summoned to breakfast, and thus ended their discourse for the present, very little to the satisfaction of any of the parties.

Fanny was now walking in an avenue at fome distance from the house, where Joseph had promised to take the first opportunity of coming to her. She had not a shilling in the world, and had subsisted, ever since her return, entirely on the charity of Parion Adams. A young gentleman, attended by many servants, came up to her, and asked her if that was not the Lady Booby's house before him? This indeed he well knew, but had framed the question for no other reason than to make her look up, and discover if her face was equal to the delicacy of her shape, He no sooner saw it, than he was struck with Vot. II.

amazement. He stopt his horse, and swore the was the most beautiful creature he ever beheld: then instantly alighting, and delivering his horse to his servant, he rapt out half a dozen oaths that he would kis her: to which she at first submitted, begging he would not be rude: but he was not fatisfied with the civility of a falute, nor even with the rudest attack he could make on her lips. but caught her in his arms, and endeavoured to kiss her breasts, which with all her strength she resisted, and, as our spark was not of the Herculean race, with some difficulty prevented. The young gentleman being foon out of breath in the struggle, quitted her, and, remounting his horse, called one of his fervants to him, whom he ordered to stay behind with her, and make her any offers whatever, to prevail on her to return home with him in the evening; and to affure her he would take her into keeping. He then rode on with his other fervants, and arrived at the Lady's house, to whom he was a distant relation, and was come to pay a visit.

The trusty fellow, who was employed in an office he had been long accustomed to, discharged his part with all the fidelity and dexterity imaginable; but to no purpose. She was entirely deaf to his offers, and re-

JOSEPH ANDREWS: 219

iested them with the utmost disdain. At last the pimp, who had perhaps more warm blood about him than his master, began to solicit for himself: he told her, though he was a fervant, he was a man of some fortune, which he would make her mistress of ------ and this without any infult to her virtue, for that he would marry her. She answered, if his mafter himself, or the greatest lord in the land, would marry her, she would refuse him. At last, being weary with persuasions, and on fire with charms which would have almost kindled a flame in the bosom of an ancient philosopher, or modern divine, he tastened his horse to the ground, and attacked her with much more force than the gentleman had exerted. Poor Fanny would not have been able to refift his rudeness a long time; but the deity who prefides over chafte love, fent her Joseph to her affistance. no fooner came within fight, and perceived her struggling with a man, than, like a cannon ball, or like lightening, or any thing that is swifter, if any thing be, he ran towards her, and coming up just as the ravisher had torn her handkerchief from her breaft. before his lips had touched that feat of innocence and blifs, he dealt him fo lufty as blow in that part of his neck which a rope would have become with the utmost propriety, that the fellow staggered backwards; and perceiving he had to do with fomething rougher than the little tender, trembling hand of Fanny, he quitted her, and turning about faw his rival, with fire flashing from his eyes, again ready to affail him; and indeed before he could well defend himself, or return the first blow, received a fecond, which, had it fallen on that part of the Romach to which it was directed, would have been probably the last he would have had any occasion for ; but the ravisher lifting up his hand, drove the blow upwards to his mouth, whence it diflodged three of his teeth; and now not conceiving any extraordinary affection for the beauty of Joseph's person, nor being extremely pleased with this method of falutation, he collected all his force, and aimed a blow at Joseph's breast, which he artfully parry'd with one fift, fo that it lost its. force entirely in air; and stepping one foot backward, he durted his fift fo fiercely at his enemy, that had he not caught it in his hand (for he was a boxer of no inferior fame) it must have tumbled him on the ground: And now the ravisher meditated anotherblow, which he aimed at that part of the breast where the heart is lodged: Joseph did not catch it as before, yet so prevented its aim, that it fell directly on his nofe, but with abated force. Joseph then moving both fift and foot forwards at the same time, threw his head so dextrously into the stomach of the ravisher, that he fell a lifeless lump on the field, where he lay many minutes breathless and motionless.

When Fanny faw her Joseph receive a blow in his face, and blood running in a Aream from him, the began to tear her hair, and invoke all human and divine power to She was not, however, longhis affiftance. under this affliction, before Joseph, having conquered his enemy, ran to her, and affured her he was not hurt; she then instantly fellon her knees, and thanked God that he had made Joseph the means of her rescue, and at the same time preserved him from being: injured in attempting it. She offered with her handkerchief to wipe his blood from his. face; but he feeing his rival attempting to recover his legs, turned to him, and asked him if he had enough; to which the other answered, he had; for he believed he had fought with the devil, instead of a man; and loosening his horse, said he should not have attempted the wench if he had known she. had been fo well provided for.

Fanny now begged Joseph to return with her to Parson Adams, and to promise that: he would leave her no more; these were:

T 3

propositions so agreeable to Joseph, that, had he heard them, he would have given an immediate affent: but indeed his eyes were now his only fense; for you may remember, reader_ that the ravisher had tore her handkerchief from Fanny's neck, by which he had difcovered fuch a fight, that Joseph hath declared. all the statues he ever beheld, were so much inferior to it in beauty, that it was more capable of converting a man into a statue, than of being imitated by the greatest master of that art. This modest creature, whom no warmth of fummer could ever induce to expose her charms to the wanton sun, a modesty: to which perhaps they owed their inconceivable whiteness, had stood many minutes. bare-necked in the presence of Joseph, before her apprehension of his danger, and the horror of seeing his blood, would suffer her cace to reflect on what concerned herself: till at last, when the cause of her concern had vanished, an admiration at his filence, together with observing the fixed position of his eyes, produced an idea in the lovely maid, which brought more blood into her face than had flowed from Joseph's nostrils. The snowy hue of her bosom was likewise exchanged to vermilion at the instant when she clapped her handkerchief round her neck. Joseph faw the uneafiness that she suffered, and immedia ately removed his eyes from an object, in furveying which he had felt the greatest defight which the organs of fight were capable of conveying to his foul. So great was his fear of offending her, and so truly did his passion for her deserve the noble name of love.

Fanny, being recovered from her confufion, which was almost equalled by what Joseph had felt from observing it, again. mentioned her request; this was instantly and gladly complied with, and together they croffed two or three fields, which brought them to the habitation of Mr Adams.

H A P. VIII.

A discourse which happened between Mr Adains, Mrs Adams, Joseph, and Fanny, with some behaviour of Mr Adams which would be called by some few readers very low, abfurd and unnatural.

HE parson and his wife had just ended a long dispute when the lovers came to the door. Indeed this young couple had been the subject of the dispute; for Mrs Adatas was one of those prudent people who never do any thing to injure their families, or perhaps one of those good mothers who would even stretch their conscience to serve their children. She had long entertained hopes of feeing her eldest daughter succeed Mrs Slipflop, and of making her fecond for an exciseman by Lady Booby's interest. These were expectations the could not endure the thoughts of quitting, and was therefore very uneasy to see her husband so resolute to onpose the Lady's intentions in Fanny's affair. She told him, ' It behoved every man to take the first care of his family; that he had a wife and fix children, the maintain-' ing and providing for whom would be bufiness enough for him without intermedd-' ling in other folks affairs; that he had always preached up fubmission to superiors, ' and would do ill to give an example of the contrary behaviour in his own conduct: ' that if Lady Booby did wrong, she must answer for it herself, and the sin would not. ' ly at their door; that Fanny had been a. fervant, and bred up in the Lady's own family, and confequently she must haveknown more of her than they did; and it was very improbable, if she had behaved herfelf well, that the Lady would have been · fo bitterly her enemy; that he was perhaps too much inclined to think well of her, because she was handsome, but hand, fome women were often no better than they should be; that God made ugly wo-# men as well as handsome ones; and that if a woman had virtue, it fignified nothing whether the had beauty or no." For all which reasons she concluded he should oblige the Lady, and stop the future publication of the banns. But all these excellent arguments had no effect on the parson, who perfifted in doing his duty, without regards ing the confequence it might have on his worldly interest; he endeavoured to answer her as well as he could, to which the had just finished her reply, (for she had always the last word every where but at church) when Joseph and Fanny entered their kitchen, where the parson and his wife then fat at breakfast over some bacon and cabbage: There was a coldness in the civility of Mirs. Adams, which persons of accurate speculation might have observed, but escaped her present guests; indeed it was a good deal covered by the heartiness of Adams, who no fooner heard that Fanny had neither ate nor drank that morning, than he presented her a bone of bacon he had just been grawing; being the only remains of his provition, and then ran nimbly to the tap, and produced a mug of small beer, which he called ale; however, it was the best in his house. Joseph, addressing himself to the parson, told him the discourse which had passed between Squire Booby, his fister, and himfelf, concerning

JOSEPH ANDREWS. 225

Fanny: he then acquainted him with the dangers whence he had rescued her, and communicated fome apprehensions on her account. He concluded, that he should never have an easy moment till Fanny was abfolutely his, and begged that he might be fuffered to fetch a licence, faying, he could eafily borrow the money. The parson anfwered, that he had already given his fentiments concerning a licence, and that a very few days would make it unnecessary. feph, fays he, I wish this haste doth not arise rather from your impatience thanyour fear; but as it certainly fprings fromone of these causes, I will examine both. Of each of these therefore in their turn: and first for the first of these, namely, impatience. Now, child, I must inform you that if in your purposed marriage with this ' young woman, you have no intention but. the indulgence of carnal appetites, you are: guilty of a very heinous fin. Marriage was ordained for nobler purposes, as you will learn when you hear the fervice provided on that occasion read to you. Nay, perhaps, if you are a good lad, I shall give ' you a fermon gratis, wherein I shall de-! monstrate how little regard ought to be 4 had to the flesh on such occasions. The text will be, child, Matthew the 5th, and part of the 28th verse, Whosoever look-"eth on a woman so as to lust after her." The latter part I shall omit, as foreign to 'my purpose. Indeed all such brutal lusts 4 and affections are to be greatly subdued, if onot totally eradicated, before the vessel can be faid to be confecrated to honour. marry with a view of gratifying those in-· clinations is a proflitution of that holy ceremony, and must entail a curse on all who * fo lightly undertake it. If, therefore, this haste arises from impatience, you are to d correct and not give way to it. Now, as 4 to the fecond head which I proposed to fpeak to, namely, fear; it argues a diffi-4 dence highly criminal of that power in 4 which alone we should put our trust, seeing we may be well affured that he is able not only to defeat the defigns of our enemies, but even to turn their hearts. Instead of · taking therefore any unjustifiable or desperate means to rid ourselves of fear, we s should resort to prayer only on these occasions; and we may be then certain of obtaining what is belt for us. When any accident threatens us, we are not to defpair, nor when it overtakes us to grieve; we must submit in all things to the will of providence, and fet our affections fo much on nothing here, that we cannot quit it without reluctance. You are a young man, and can know but little of this world; I am older, and have feen a great deal, passions are criminal in their excess; and · even love itself, if it is not subservient to ! our duty, may render us blind to it. * Abraham fo loved his fon Isaac, as to refule the facrifice required, is there any of us who would not condemn him? loseph. I know your many good qualities, and va-· lue you for them: but as I am to render an account of your foul, which is committed to my cure, I cannot fee any fault without reminding you of it. You are too much inclined to passion, child, and have fet your affections fo absolutely on this voung woman, that if God required her at your hands, I fear you would reluctantly part with her. Now, believe me, no Chriflian ought fo to fet his heart, on any perfon or thing in this world, but that whenever it shall be required or taken from him in any manner by Divine Providence he may be able peaceably, quietly, and contentedly to refign 'it.' At which words one came hastily in, and acquainted Mr Adams that his youngest fon was drowned. He stood silent a moment, and foon began to stamp about the room, and deplore his loss with the bitterest agony. Joseph, who was overwhelmed with concern likewise, recovered himself sufficiently to endeavour to comfort the Parson; in which attempt he used many arguments, that he had at feveral times remembered out of his own discourses both in private and public, (for he was a great enemy to the passions, and preached nothing more than the conquest of them by reason and grace), but he was not at leisure now to hearken to his advice. 'Child. child.' faid he, f do not go about impossibilities. Had it been any other of my children, I ! could have borne it with patience; but my Little prattler, the darling and comfort of my old age the little wretch to be ! fnatched out of life just at his entrance into it; the sweetest, best tempered boy, who never did a thing to offend me. It was 5; but this morning I gave him his first lesson in Que Genus. This was the yery book he ! learned; poor child! it is of no further use to thee now. He would have made the best scholar, and have been an ornament to the church:----fuch parts, and fuch goodfinels, never met in one fo young." the handfomest lad too, fays Mrs Adams, tecovering from a swoon in Fanny's arms .---1 My poor Jacky, shall I never see the more?" cries the Parson--- Yes furely,' fays Joseph, f and in a better place, you will meet again I never to part more.'---- I believe the Parton VOL. II.

did not hear these words, for he paid little regard to them, but went on lamenting, whilk the tears trickled down into his bosom. last he cried out, ' Where is my little dar-' ling?' and was fallying out, when, to his great furprise and joy, in which I hope the reader will sympathise, he met his son in a wet condition indeed, but alive, and running towards him. The person who brought the news of this misfortune had been a little too eager, as people fometimes are, from, I believe, no very good principle, to relate ill news; and feeing him fall into the river, instead of running to his assistance, directly ran to acquaint his father of a fate which he had concluded to be inevitable, but whence the child was relieved by the fame poor pedlar who had relieved his father before from a The Parson's joy was now as lefs diffrefsk extravagant as his grief had been before; he kissed and embruced his son a thousand times, and danced about the room like one frantic: but as foon as he discovered the face of his old friend the pedlar, and heard the fresh obligation he had to him, what were his fenfations? not those which two courtiers feet in one another's embraces; not those with which a great man receives the vile, treacherous engines of his wicked purpofes; not those with which a worthless younger brother withes his elder joy of a fon, or a man congratulates his rival on his obtaining a miltress, a place, or an honour.—No, Reader, he felt the ebulition, the overflowings of a foll, an honest, open heart towards the perfon who had conferred a real obligation, and of which if thou canst not conceive an idea within, I will not vainly endeavour to affist thee.

When these tumults were over, the Parfon, taking Joseph aude, proceeded thus----No, Joseph, do not give too much way to thy passions, if thou dost expect happiness." ---- I'he patience of Joseph, nor perhaps of Job, could bear no longer; he interrupted the Parson, saying, It was easier to give advice than to take it; nor did he perceive he could so entirely conquer himself, when he apprehended he had loft his fon, or when he found him recovered.— Boy,' replied Adams, raising his voice, ' it doth not become green heads to advise grey hairs .---Thou art ignorant of the tenderness of fatherly affection; when thou art a father, thou wilt be capable then only of knowing what a father can feel. No man is obliged to impossibilities; and the loss of a child is one of those great trials, where our grief ' may be allowed to become immoderate.' Well, Sir,' cries Joseph, and if I love a mistress as well as you your child, furely her loss would grieve me equally? Yes, but such love is foolithness; and wrong in itself, and ought to be conquered, anfivered Adams, 'it favours too much of the ' flesh.' ' Sure, Sir,' fays Joseph, 'it is not finful to love my wife, no not even to doat on her to diffraction!' Indeed; but it is, fays Adams. ' Every man ought to love his. wife, no doubt; we are commanded fo to do; but we ought to love her with mode-" ration and discretion.'--- 1 am afraid I 's shall be guilty of some sin, in spite of all my endeavours, fays Joseph; for I shall love without any moderation. I am forc.'--You talk foolffhly and childifhly, cries Adams. ' Indeed,' Yays Mrs Adams, who had listened to the latter part of their conversal. tion, 'you talk more foolishly yourself. I hope, my dear, you will never preach and fuch doctrine, as that hulbands can love their wives too well. If I knew you had I fuch a fermon in the house, I am fure I would burn it; and I declare, if I had not been convinced you had loved me as well us wowoonld, I can answer for myself, I should have hated and despised you. Marry come up! Fine doctrine indeed! A wife hath & right to infilt on a hufband's loving her as s much as ever he can; and he is a finful vile

DOSEPH ANDREWS

* lain who doth not. Doth he not promife to ! love her and to comfort her, and to cherith her, and all that? I am fure I remember it all, s as well as if I had repeated it over but yes-. terday, and shall never forget it. Hesides, I s am certain you do not preach as you pracstife: for you have been a loving and a cherithing hufband to me, that's the truth f on't; and why you hould endeayour to f put fuch wicked nonfense into this young man's head, I cannot devise. Don't hearken to him, Mr Joseph, be as good a husband s as you are able, and love your wife with sall your body and foul too. Here aiviolent rap at the door put an end to their difcourse, and produced a scene which the reader will find in the next chapter.

CHAP. IX.

A visit which the good Lady Booby and her polite friend paid to the Parson.

The Lady Booby had no fooner had an account from the gentleman of his meeting a wonderful beauty near her house, and perceived the raptures with which he spoke of her, than immediately concluding it must be Fanay, she began to mediate a design of bringing them better arquainted; and to entertain hopes that the sine cloaths, prefents, and promifes of this youth, would prevail on her to abandon Joseph: the therefore proposed to her company a walk in the fields before dinner, when the led them towards Mr Adams's house; and, as the approached it, told them, if they pleased the would divert them with one of the most ris diculous fights they had ever feed; which was an old foolish partion, who, the said 'laughing, kept a wife and fix brats on a falary of about twenty pounds a year ; adding, that there was not such another ragged family in the parith. They all readily agreed to this vifit, and arrived whill Mrs Adams was declaiming as in the last chapter. Beat. Didapper, (which was the name of the young gentleman we have feely riding towards Lade Booby's), with his cane mimicked the rap of 'The people a London footman at the door. within, namely, Adams, his wife, and three children, Joseph, Fanny, and the pedlar, were all thrown into confusion by this knock; but Adams directly went to the door, which being opened, the Lady Booby and her campany walked in, and were received by the parfon with about two hundred bows, and by his wife with as many curties: the latter telling the Lady, She was afhamed to be feen in fuch a pickle, and that her house was in such a litter: but that if the had expected

Mich stationions from hen Lind billipsche should drive sound; homin tarbetter manner. The parson made no apologies though he was in his half cation and flamed, nighticap. He faild, They were lumitily welcome to his possecutions grand, surning so Mr Didapper, croed out, Non mea renidet in dono leasants, this Beawanforbell he did not inviertand Welsh; at which the parson stared, and made no reply.

Mr. Diddpper, or beau Didapper, was a young grationam of about four foot five inches in heights vid word his wown hain, though the femeist of it might have giden aid Legisteran a no pleasy testesities. His flice was thin and palie whe shape of his body and legs adnesof the best affor he had weny namentwilloudderny constitue och fig and his gait might more properly be called hopping than Walking a The qualifications of his mind salene weth adapted to his person. We shall drandie chemi finis reigneisely ; ific year noc maturely ignorance for he could talk a little French, and fing two or three italian fongs; he had lived too much in the world to be Balliful, andittoo muchiat court to be proud: he feemed not much inclined to avarice; for he was probable in his exponees v now had he all the features of prodigality; for hemever gave a failing to be bater of women's for he always dangled after them; yet foolitale fullject to luft, that he had among those who knew him best, the characteristic great moderation in his pleasures. No drinker of wine; nor for addicted to passion, but that a those word or two from an adventate; made him immediately cool.

70° SERVIPATIVEN THREE OF

Now, to give him only a dafte or two on the affirmative fide: though he was been to an immense fortune, he chose, for the pitiful and dirty confideration of a place of little confequence, to depend entirely on the will of a fellowishow they call a great man; who treated him with the monoh diffesport. and exacted of him a plenary sobedience to his commands; which he implicitly fuberitted to, at the expence of his confesence, his thonour and of his country, in which he had himself so very large a share. And to finish his characterizias he was entirely well fatisfied with his own person and parts, so he was very ant to ridicule and laugh at any imperfection in another.: Such was the little person, or rather thing that hopped after Lady Booby into Mr Adams's kitchen.

The parton and his company retreated from the chimney-fide, where they had been feated, to give room to the Lady and hers. Instead of returning any of the curties or extraordinary civilizies of Mrs Adams, the Lady, turning to Mr Booly, cried out, " Quel bête! quel animal?" and presently after discovering Fanny, (for the did not need the circumstance of her standing by Juseph to affire the identity of her perton), the afked the beau, Whether he did not think her a pretty girl?---- Begad, Madam? answeredthe, Altisthe very faine I'met.' . I did not imagine, replied the Lady, you ' had fo good a take.' ' Because I never bliked you, I warrant, cries the beau. Ridiculous !! faid the, ' you know you was a ziways my avertion.' I would nover s mention aversions showered the beau, with that face *; dear Lady Booby, wash your face before you mention aversion, I S befeech you! He then laughed, and num bd about to corpiet with Fanny, in the fact. .... Mis Adams had been all this time begging and praying the ladies to fit down, a favour which the at full obtained. The listle boy to whom the avoident had happened, fill keeping this place by the fire, was chid by his mother for net being more mannerly; but Lady Booky took his part,' and, dominend ing his belianty told the pariba he was his rery product so She then desing a book in his

I est this 'should appear unnatural' to some readers, we think proper to acquaint them; that it is taken barbation from very police could assistant hand, alked, If he could read? A Yes. cried Adams, 'a little Latin, Madam; he is just 'got into Qua Genus.' 'A fig for quere genius,' answered the; 'let me hear him read a little Englith .-. Lege, Dick, Legel' faid Adams: but the boy made no answer, till he faw the Parson knit his brows; and then cried, 'I don't understand you, father.' ' How, boy!' fays Adams, ' what doth Lego make in the imperative mood? Legito doth it not?' Yes,' answered Dick .----' And what belides?' fays the father. ' Lege,' quoth the fon, after fome helitation. A good boy,' fave the father: ' And now, child, what is the English of Lego?'--To which the boy, after long puzzling, answered, he could not tell, ' How !' cries Adams, in a passion; 'what, hath the water washed away your learning? Why, what is Latin for the English verb read? Consider before ' you speak. The child considered some time, and the parlon cried twice or thrice, Le ..... Le ..... Dick answered, Loro.' · Very well; and then what is the English, favs the parson. of the verb Lego?' "read, eried Dick. . ' Very well,' faid the parson, sa good boy, you can do well, if you will take pains. I affure your Ladyhip he is not much above eight years old, and is out of his Propria eue Maribus als ready. Come. Dick, read to her Ladythip. Which she again desiring, in order to give the bean time and opportunity with Fastly, Dick began as in the following chapter.

JOSEPH ANDREWS. 239

C H A P. X.

The history of two friends, which may afford, an useful lefton to all those persons who happen to take up their residence in married, families.

EONARD and Paul were two friends.' Pronounce it Lennard, child,' cried' the parson. 'Pray, Mr Adams,' says Lady Booby, ' let your son read without inter-' "ruption." Dick then proceeded. Len-"nard and Baul were two friends, who hawing been educated together at the same - school, commenced a friendship which they preserved a long time for each other. It was fo deeply fixed in both their minds, that a long absence, during which they had maintained no correspondence, did not era-" dicate nor leffen it : but it revived in all its ". force at their first meeting; which was not till after fifteen years absence, most of which time Lennard had fpent in the East-Indi-es.'-- Pronounce it short, Indies,' says Adams .-- Pray, Sir, be quiet, fays the

bao THE ADVENTURES OF

Lady. The boy repeated, in the East-Indies, whilst Paul had served his king and country in the army. In which different sucfervices, they had found such different succes, that Lennard was now married, and retired with a fortune of thirty thousand pounds; and Paul was arrived to the degree of a seutenant of foot, and was not worth a fingle thilling worth a fingle thilling. The regiment in which Paul was sta-"tioned, happened to be ordered into quarters, within a small distance from the estate " which Lennard had purchased, and where The was settled. This latter, who was now. become a country gentleman, and a justice of peace, came to attend the quarter-fef-• fions, in the town where his old friend was s quartered! Soon after his arrival, fome . affair in which a foldier was concerned, orcafioned Paul to attend the julices. * hood, and time, and the change of climate, had to much altered Lennard, that Paul "L' did not immediately recollect the features. of his old acquaintance; but it was otherwife with Lennard, he knew Paul the moment he faw him; nor could he contain. himself from quitting the bench, and sunoning hastily to embrace him. Paul stood at first a little surprised; but had soon sufficient information from his friend, whom he no fooner remembered, than he returned his embrace with a passion which made many of the spectators laugh, and gave to fome few a much higher and more agree* able fensation.

Not to detain the reader with minute circumstances, Lennard insisted on his friend's returning with him to his house that evening; which request was complied with, and leave for a month's absence for

Paul obtained of the commanding officer.

If it was possible for any circumstance to give any addition to the happiness which Paul proposed in this visit, he received that additional pleasure, by finding on his arrival at his friend's house, that his lady was an old acquaintance which he had formerly contracted at his quarters; and who had always appeared to be of a most agreeable temper. A character she had ever maintained among her intimates, being of that number, every individual of which is called quite the best fort of woman in the world.

But good as this lady was, she was still a woman; that is to say, an angel, and not an angel.'--- You must mistake, child,' cries the Parson, s for you read nonsense. It is so in the book,' answered the son. Mr Adams was then silenced by authority, and Dick proceeded.--- For though her person.

Vol. II. X

was of that kind to which men attribute the name of angel, yet in her mind she was perfectly woman. Of which a great degree of obstinacy gave the most remarkable and perhaps most pernicious instance.

' A day or two pass'd after Paul's arrival, before any instances of this appeared; but it was impossible to conceal it Both she and her husband soon lost · all apprehension from their friend's prefence, and fell to their disputes with as much vigour as ever. These were still purfued with the utmost ardour and eagere ness, however trifling the causes were whence they first arose. Nay, however incredible it may feem, the little confequence of the matter in debate was frequently given as a reason for the sierceness of the contention, as thus: "If you loved me, " fure you would never dispute with me " fuch a trifle as this." The answer to which · is very obvious; for the argument would-· hold equally on both fides, and was con-• flantly retorted with fome addition, as---" I am fure I have much more reason to say " fo, who am in the right." During all these disputes, Paul always kept strict filence, and preferved an even countenance. without shewing the least visible inclination to either party. One day, however, when

JOSEPH ANDREWS.

Madam had left the room in a violent fury, · Lennard could not refrain from referring his cause to his friend. Was ever any thing fo unreasonable, fays he, as this wo-' man? What shall I do with her? I doat on her to distraction; nor have I any cause to complain of more than this oblinacy in her temper: whatever she afferts she will maintain against all the reason and conviction in the world. Pray give me your advice .-- First, fays Paul, I will give my opinion, which is flatly that you are in the wrong; for supposing she is in the wrong, was the subject of your contention any ways material? What fignified it whether you was married in a red or yellow waiftcoat? for that was your dispute. Now suppose ' she was mistaken, as you love her you say fo tenderly, and I believe she deserves it. would it not have been wifer to have yielded, though you certainly knew yourfelf in the right, than to give either her or yourfelf any uneafiness? For my own part, if ever I marry, I am resolved to enter into an agreement with my wife, that in all difputes (especially about trifles) that party who is most convinced they are right, shall always furrender the victory: by which means we shall both be forward to give up the cause. I own, said Lennard, my dear ' friend, shaking him by the hand, there is great truth and reason in what you say: and I will for the future endeavour to fol-· low your advice. They foon after broke up the conversation, and Lennard going to his wife asked her pardon, and told her his friend had convinced him he had been in the wrong. She immediately began a vast encomium on Paul, in which he seconded her, and both agreed he was the worthiest and wifest man upon earth. When next they met, which was at fup; er, though ' she had premised not to mention what her ' husband told her, she could not forbear catting the kindest and most affectionate ' looks on Paul, and asked him with the fweetest voice, whether she should help him to some potted woodcock? Potted partridge, my dear, you mean, fays the bufband. My dear, fays she, I ask your friend if he will eat any potted woodcock; and I am fure I must know who petted it. think I should know too who shot them, replied the husband, and I am convinced that I have not feen a woodcock this year: however, though I know I am in the right · I submit, and the potted partridge is potted woodcock, if you defire to have it fo. It is equal to me, fays she, whether it is one or the other; but you would perfuade

JOSEPH ANDREWS. 245

one out of one's fenses; to be sure you are always in the right in your own opinion; but your friend, I believe, knows which he is eating. Paul answered nothing. ! and the dispute continued, as usual, the greatest part of the evening. The next morning the lady accidentally meeting Paul, and being convinced he was her friend, and of her fide, accosted him thus: . ---- I am certain, Sir, you have long fince wondered at the unreasonableness of my husband. He is indeed, in other respects; a good fort of man; but fo politive, that on woman but one of my complying temper could possibly live with him. Why. · last night now, was ever any creature so ' unreasonable? I am certain you must condemn him. - Pray, answer me, was he not in the wrong? Paul, after a short silence, spoke as follows: I am forry, Madam, that as good manners obliges me to answer against my will, so an adherence to truth forces me to declare myself of a different opinion. To be plain and honest, ' you was entirely in the wrong; the cause I own was not worth disputing, but the bird was undoubtedly a partridge. O Sir, ree plied the lady, I cannot possibly help your tafte. Madam, returned Paul, that is very · little material; for had it been otherwise. X 3

" a husband might have expedied submission. Indeed! Sir, fays the, I affure you---- Yes, ' Madam, cry'd he, he might from a person of your excellent understanding; and pardon me for faying, fuch a condefcention would have shewn a superiority of sense even to your husband himself. But, dear ' Sir, faid the, why should I submit when I ' am in the right? For that very reason, anfwered he, it would be the greatest instance of affection imaginable: for can any thing be a greater object of our compassion than a person whom we love, in the wrong? Ay, but I should endeavour, faid she, to set hime right. Pardon me, Madam, answered Paul. I will apply to your own experience, if you ever found your arguments had that effect. The more our judgments err, the less we are willing to own it: for my own part, I have always observed the persons who maintain the worst side in any contest, are the warmest. Why, fays she, I must confels there is truth in what you fay, and I will endeavour to practife it. The husband then coming in, Paul departed. And Lennard approaching his wife with an airof good humour, told her he was forry for 4 their foolish dispute last night: but he was. now convinced of his error. She answered finiling, the believed the owed his conde• fcension to his complaifance; that she was a shamed to think a word had passed on so filly an occasion, especially as she was fatisfied she had been mistaken. A little contention followed, but with the utmost good will to each other, and was concluded by her afferting that Paul had thoroughly con-

her afterting that Paul had thoroughly con-

Upon which they both united in the praises

a of their common friend. · Paul now passed his time with great sa-• tisfaction; these disputes being much less frequent, as well as shorter than usual: but the devil, or some unlucky accident, in which perhaps the devil had no hand. fhortly put an end to his happiness. He was now eternally the private referee of every difference; in which, after having e perfectly as he thought, established the doctrine of submission, he never scrupled to assure both privately they were in the e right in every argument, as before he had followed the contrary method. One day a violent litigation happened in his absence, and both parties agreed to refer it to his decision. The husband professing himself fure the decision would be in his favour; the wife answered, he might be mistaken; for the believed his friend was convinced 4 how feldom the was to blame; and that if he knew all --- The husband reply'd----My dear, I have no defire of any retrofpect; but I believe, if you knew all too, you would not imagine my friend to en-' tirely on your side. Nay, says she, since ' you provoke me, I will mention one inflance. You may remember our dispute about fending Jacky to school in cold weather, which point I gave up to you from mere compassion, knowing myself to be in the right; and Paul himself told me afterwards, he thought me fo. My dear, replied the husband, I will not scruple your veracity; but I affure you folemnly, on my applying to him, he gave it absolutely on my side, and faid he would have afted in the fame manner. They then proceeded to produce numberleis other instances, in all which Paul had, on vows of fecrecy, given his opinion on both fides. In the conclusion, both be-· lieving each other, they fell feverely on the treachery of Paul, and agreed that he had been the occasion of almost every dispute which had fallen out between them. They then became extremely loving, and fo full of condescention on both fides, that they vied with each other in censuring their own conduct, and jointly vented their indignation on Paul, whom the wife, fearing a bloody confequence, earneflly intreated her husband to suffer quietly to depart the next day, which was the time fixed for his return to quarters, and then drop his acquaintance.

· However ungenerous this behaviour in Lennard may be esteemed, his wife obtained a promise from him (though with difficulty) to follow her advice; but they both expressed such unusual coldness that day to Paul, that he, who was quick of apprehension, taking Lennard aside, pref-· fed him to home, that he at last-discovered the fecret. Paul acknowledged the truth, but told him the defign with which he had done it.—To which the other answered. · he would have acted more friendly to have · let him into the whole design; for that he ' might have affured himself of his secrecy. · Paul replied with tome indignation, he had sgiven him a sufficient proof how capable • he was of concealing a fecret from his wife. Lennard returned with some warmth, he ' had more reason to upbraid him, for that · he had caused most of the quarrels between s them by his strange conduct, and might (if they had not discovered the affair to each other) have been the occasion of their ' separation. Paul then said' --- but something now happened which put a stop to Dick's reading, and of which we shall treat in the next chapter.

C H A P. XI.

In which the history is continued.

TOSEPH ANDREWS had borne with great uneafiness the impertinence of Beau Dicapper to Fanny, who had been talking pretty freely to her, and offering her fettlemenes; but the respect to the company had restrained him from interfering, whilst the Beau confined himself to the use of his tongue only; but the faid beau watching an opportunity whilst the ladies eyes were disposed another way, offered a rudeness to her with his hands, which Joseph no sooner perceived than he presented him with so sound a box on the ear, that it conveyed him several paces from where he stood. The ladies immediately screamed out, rose from their chairs: and the beau, as foon as he recovered himfelf, drew hishanger, which Adams observing, fnatched up the lid of a pot in his left hand. and covering himself with it as with a shield. without any weapon of offence in his other hand, stept in before Joseph, and exposed himself to the enraged beau, who threatened fuch perdition and destruction, that it frighted the women, who were all got in a huddle together, out of their wits, even to hear his denunciations of vengeance. Joseph was of a different complection, and begged Adams to let his rival come on; for he had a good cudgel in his hand, and did not fear him. Fanny now fainted into Mrs Adams's arms. and the whole room was in confusion, when Mr Booby, passing by Adams, who lay snug under the pot lid, came up to Didapper, and infifted on his sheathing the hanger, promifing he should have fatisfaction; which Iofeph declared he would give him, and fight him at any weapon whatever. The beau now fheathed his hanger, and taking out a pocket-glass, and vowing vengeance all the time, readjusted his hair; the parson depofited his shield, and Joseph running to Fanny foon brought her back to life. Lady Booby chid Joseph for his infult on Didapper; but he answered, he would have attacked an army in the same cause. 'What cause?' said the Lady. ' Madam,' answered Joseph, he was rude to that young woman.'---

" What,' fays the Lady, ' I suppose he would · have kissed the wench; and is a gentleman to be struck for such an offer? I must tell vou, Joseph, these airs do not become you.'

. Madam,' faid Mr Booby, ' I faw the whole affair, and I do not commend my

• brother: for I cannot perceive why he flould take upon him to be this girl's champion,'--- I can commend him,' favs Adams, ' he is a brave lad; and it becomes any man to be the champion of the innocent; and he must be the basest coward. . who would not vindicate a woman with whom he is on the brink of marriage,' Sir,' fays Mr Booby, ' my brother is not a proper match for fuch a young woman as this.'- No,' fays Lady Booby, ' nor do you, Mr Adams, act in your proper character, by encouraging any fuch doings; and I am very much furprifed you should concern yourfelf in it. I think your wife ' and family your properer care.' ' Indeed, Madam, your Ladyship says very true,' answered Mrs Adams, ' he talks a pack of ononiense, that the whole parish are his children. I am fure I don't understand what he means by it; it would make fome women fuspect he had gone astray: but I acquit him of that; I can read scripture as well as he, and I never found that the parfon was obliged to provide for other folks children; and belides, he is but a poor curate, and hath little enough, as your Ladvship knows, for me and mine.' You fay very well, Mrs Adams, quoth the Lady Booby, who had not spoke a word to her before, ' you feem to be a very fenfible wo* man; and I affure you your husband is acting a very foolish part, and opposing · his own interest; feeing my nephew is vioe lently fet against this match; and indeed I can't blame him; it is by no means one ' fuitable to our family.' In this manner the Lady broceeded with Mrs Adams, whilltethe beau hopped about the room, shaking his head, partly from pain, and partly from anger; and Pamela was chiding Fanny for her assurance, in aiming at such a match as her brother. Poor Fanny answered only with her tears, which had long fince begun to wet her handkerchief; which Joseph perceiving, took her by the arm, and wrapping it in his carried her off, fwearing he would own no relation to any one who was an enemy to her he loved more than all the world. He went but with Fanny under his left arm, brandishing a cudgel in his right, and neither Mr Booby nor the beau thought proper to oppose him. Lady Booby and her company made a very foort stay behind him, for the Lady's bell now fummoned them to dress t for which they had just time before dinner.

Adams feeme now very much dejected, which his wife perceiving, began to apply fome matrimonial balfam. She told him he had reaften to be concerned; for that he had probably ruined his family with his tricks almost: but perhaps he was grieved for the loss of his two children, Joseph and Fanny. His eldest daughter went on: -- Indeed, Father. 4 it is very hard to bring firangers here to eat your children's bread out of their " mouths -- You have kept them ever fince they came home; and for anything I fee to the contrary, may keep them a month Ionger: are you obliged to give her meat, tho'f she was never so handsome? But I don't fee the is to much handfomer than other people. If people were to be kept for their beauty, she would scarce fare better than her neighbours, I believe .-- As for Mr " Joseph, I have nothing to fay, he is a young · man of honest principles, and will pay some * time or other for what he hath: but for the girl,---Why doth she not return to her · place the ran away from? I would not give ' fuch a vagabond flut a halfpenny, though I had a million of money; no, though the " was starving." Indeed but I would," cries little Dick; 4 and, Father, rather than repair Fanny shall be starved. I will give her "all this bread and cheefe'-- (offering what he held in his hand.) Ad: 11s imiled on the boy, and told him, he rejoiced to fee he was a Christian; and that if he had a halfpenny in his pocket, he would have given it him; telling him, it was his duty to look upon all his neighbours as his brothers and fifters, and love them accordingly. A Yes, papa, fays he, 'I love her better than my fifters: for the is handfomer than any of them. Is the fo, faucebox?" fays the fifter, giving him a box on the ear, which the futher would probably have resented, had not Joseph, Fanny, and the pediat, at that inflant returned together. -- Adams bid his wife prepare forme food for their dinner; the faid, " truly fhe could not, the had fomething elfe to do. Adams rebuked her for disputing his commands, and quoted many texts of fcripture to prove, " That the husband is the head of " the wife, and the is to fubmit and obey." The wife answered, ' it was blasphemy to talk scripture out of church; that such things were very proper to be faid in the pulpit; but that it was profane to talk them in common discourie. Joseph told Mr Adams, he was not come with any defign to give him or Mrs Adams any trouble; but to defire the favour of all their company to the George, (an ale-house in the parith), where he had befpoke a piece of bacon and greens for their dinner. Mrs Adams, who was a very good fort of woman, only rather too strict in economics, readily accepted this invitation, as did the parson himfelf by her example; and away they all walked together, not omitting little Dick, to whom Joseph gave a shilling, when he heard of his intended liberality to Fanny.

Vor.II. Y

C H A P. XII.

Where the good-natured reader will fee fomething which will give him no great pleasure.

HE pedlar had been very inquisitive, from the time he had first heard that the great house in this parish belonged to the Lady Booby; and had learned that she was the widow of Sir Thomas, and that Sir Thomas had bought Fanny, at about the age of three or four years, of a travelling woman; and now their homely but hearty meal was ended, he told Fanny, he believed he could acquaint her with her parents. The whole company, especially she herself, started at this offer of the pedlar's.---He then proceeded thus, while they all lent their strictest attention: 4 Though I am now contented with this humble way of getting my livelihood; I was formerly a gentleman; for for all those of my profession are called. In a word, I was a drummer in an Irish regis ment of foot. Whill I was in this honourable station, I attended an officer of our regiment into England à recruiting:

In our march from Brutol to Froome (for

FOSEBHTAMDREWS: 82

"frace the decayrof the moden trade, the I clothing towns have furnished the army with a great number of recruits) we overtook on the road a woman who feemed to be about thirty years old, or thereabouts; not very handsome, but well enough for a foldier. Asiwe:cameiup to her, the mended her pace, and falling into discourse with our ladies, (for every man of the party; namely, a ferjeant, two private men, and a drum, were provided with their women, except myfelf) she continued to travel on with us. I, perceiving the must fall to my · lot, advanced presently to her, made love s to her in our military way, and quickly fucceeded to my withes. We struck a bars gain within a mile, and lived together asman and wife to her dying day?----- I · fuppole,' fays Adams, interrupting him, won were married with a licence; for I don't see how you could contrive to have the banns publithed while you were tharch-" ing from place to place '-- No, Sir,' faid the pedlar, we took a licence to go to bed together, without any banns.'-- Ay, ay,' faid the parson, ' ex necessitate, a liconce may · be allowable enough; but furely, furely, the other is the more regular, and eligible . way.'---- The pedlar proceeded thus; She: seturned with me to our regiment, and removed with me from marties to godee ters, till at last, while we law at Gallways " the fell ill of a fever, and died. was on her death-bed the called me to here sand; crying bitterly, declared the could not depart this world without discovering; a fecres to me; which the faid was the only s fin which fat heavy on her heart. She frid the had formerly travelled in a company of gyphes, who had made a practice of itealing s away children; that for her own part, the had been only once guilty of that evime ; which " the faid the lamented more than all the reft of her fins, fince probably it might have oc-* casioned the death of the parents: for, added the, it is almost impossible to describe the beauty of the young creature, which was about a year and a half old when I skidnapped it. We kept her (for the was a girl,) above two years in our company, when I fold her myfelf for three guineas to " Sir Thomas Booby in Somenfetthire. Now, you know whether there are any more of that name in this county,'--- Yes,' fays Adams, there are feveral Hoobys who are * fauires, but I believe no baronet now alive: belides, it answers so exactly in every point, * there is no soom for doubt; but you have forgot to tell us the parents from whom the . child was stolen .- Their name, unswer-

JOSEPH!'ANDRE WIST 2015

ed the pedlar, was Andrews. They lived about thirty miles from the Squire; and • the told me, that I might be fure to find her out by one circumstance; for that they had a daughter of a very strange name, Pamela or Pamela: some pronounced it one way. and some the other." Fanny, who had changed colour at the first mention of the name, now fainted away; Joseph turned pale, and poor Dicky began to rour; the parion fellon his knees, and ejaculated many thankigir wings, that this discovery had been made before the dreadful fin ofinces was committed; said the hediar was firmek with ramazements not being able to account for all this confufion, the cause of which was presently opened by the parson's daughter, who was the only unconcerned person; (for the mother was . chafing Fanny's temples, and taking the utmod care of her;) and indeed Fanny was the only creature whom the daughten would not have pizied in her figuation; wherein, shough we compationate her ourfelves, we shall leave her for a little while; and pay a short wift to Lady Booby.

11.1 1 3 19 19 11

C H A P. XIII.

The history returning to the Lady Booby, given fome account of the terrible constitt in her breast between love and pride; with what, bappened on the present discovery.

HE Lady fat down with her company to dinner; but ate nothing, As foon as the cloth was removed, the whilpered Pamela, that she was taken a little ill, and desired her to entertain her husband and beau Didapper. She then went up into her chamber, fent for Slipslop, threw herself on the bed, in the agonies of love, rage, and despair: nor could fae conceal these boiling passions longer without burfting. Slipflop now approached her bed, and asked how her Lady-Thip did; but instead of revealing her diforder as the intended, the entered into a long encomium of the beauty and virtues of Toleph Andrews; ending at last with expressing her concern, that to much tenderness should be thrown away on fo despicable an object as Fanny. Slipflop, well knowing how to husmour her miltress's frenzy, proceeded to repeat, with exaggeration, if possible, all her mistress had said, and concluded with a wish. that Joseph had been a gentleman, and that the could fee her Lady in the arms of fuch a husband. The Lady then started from herbed, and taking a turn or two adrofs the room; eried our with a deep ligh, -- Sure he would ' make any woman happy.'--- Your Lady-'s ship,' says she, 'would be the happiest wol man in the world with him ... A fig for cuftom and nonsense. What vails what peoople fay? Shall I be afraid of eating fweetmears, because people may fay i have a ' fweet tooth? If I had a mind to marry a man, all the world should not hinder mer Your Ladyship hath no parents to tutelas your infections; befides, he is of your Ladyfhip's family now, and as good a gentleman as any in the country; and why should not a woman follow her mind as well as a man? Why should not your Ladyship marry the Sprother, as well as your nephew the fifter? I am fure; if it was a fragrant crime, ! "would not perfuade your Ladyship to it."--But, dear Slipflop,' answered the Lady, 'if "I could prevail on myfelf to commit fuch a weakness, there is that cursed Fanny in the "way, whom the idior, --- O how I hate and defole him !'--- She ! w little ugly "mins, "cries Supplop, "leave her to me .-- I d'fuppose 'your had ship! hath heard' of Jo-" feph's fiting with one of Mr Didapper's e felvants about her; and his mafter hath or dered them to carry her away by force this evening. I'll take care they shall not want affistance. I was talking with this gentles man, who was below, just when your Laddy Hooby, 'this instant; for I expect Mr Didapper will foon be going. Do all you can; for I am resolved this wench shall not be in our family; I will endeavour to return to the company; but let me know as foon as she is carried off.' Slipslop went away; and her mistress began to arraign her own conduct in the following manner.

JOSEPH ANDREWS. 26E

What am I doing? How do I suffer this

5 passion to creep imperceptibly upon me! How many days are passed fince I could have submitted to ask myself the question? ! --- Marry a footman! distraction! Can I A afterwards bear the eyes of my acquaintance? But I can retire from them; retire with one in whom I propose more happinefs than the world without him can give me! Retire---to feed continually on beauties, which my inflamed imagination fickens with engerly gazing on; to fatisfy every appetite, every defire, with their utmost wifh.-Ha! and do I doat thus on a footman !id despise, I detest my passion .--- Yet why? Is he not generous, gentle, kind?---Kind to whom? to the meanest wretch, a creature below my confideration. Doth he not?---Yes, he doth prefer her; curse his beauties, and the little low heart that "posselles them; which can basely descend to this despicable wench, and be ongrate. fully deaf to all the honours I do him-And can'I then love this monster? No. 1 will tear his image from my bosom, tread on him, spurn him. I will have those pitiful charms, which now I despite, mangled in my flight; for I will not fuffer the little sinde'l hate to riot in the beauties I contemm. No, though I despise him myself : though I would fourn him from my feet, was he to languish at them; no other s should take the happiness I scorn. • do I fay happiness? To me it would be mifery -- To facrifice my reputation, my 4 character, my rank in life, to the indulgence - s of a mean and a vile appetite. -- How I detelt the thought! How much more ex-· quifite is the pleasure resulting from the · reflection of virtue and prudence, than the faint relish of what flows from vice-and folly! Whither did I fuffer this improper, this mad passion to hurry me, only by neglecting to fummon the aid of reason to "my affiltance? Reason, which hath now + fet before me my defires in their proper colours, and immediately helped me to expell them. Yes, I thank Heaven and my rpride, I have now perfectly conquered this unworthy pullion; and if there was no ob-I stacle in its way, my pride would di.dain any pleasures which could be the confequence of so base, so mean, so vulgar'----Blipflop returned at this instant in a violent hurry, and with the utmost exgerness cried ont, --- O, Madam, I have brange news. Tom the footman is just come from the George; where, it feems, Joseph and the rest of them are a jinketting; and he says; there is a strange man who hath discovered that Fanny and Joseph are brother and ifilter.'-- 'How, Slipflop!' cries the Lady in a surprise. ___ I had not time, Madam? cries Slipflop, ' to enquire about particles. but Tom favs, it is most certainly true.

This unexpected account entirely oblited rated all those admirable reflections which the inpreme power of reason had so wisely made just before. In short, when despair, which had more thare in producing the resolutions of hatred we have seen taken, began to restreat, the Lady hestated a moment, and then for getting all the purport of her solid loquy, dismissed her woman again, with orders to bid Tom attend her in the parlous, whither she now hastened to acquaint Pamela with the news. Pamela said, She could not believe it: for she had never heard that her mother had loft a child, or that she had ever had any more than Joseph and herself. The lady flew into a violent rage with her, and talked of upstarts, and disowning relations who had so lately been on a level with her, Pamela made no answer: but her husband taking up her cause severely reprimanded his aunt for her behaviour to his wife; he told her, if it had been earlier in the evening the should not have staid a moment longer in her house; that he was convinced, if this young woman could be proved her fifter, she would readily embrace her as fuch; and he himself would do the same. He then desired the fellow might be fent for, and the young woman with him; which Lady Booby immediately ordered, and thinking proper to make some apology to Pamela for what she had faid, it was readily accepted, and all things reconciled.

The pedlar now attended, as did Fanny, and Joseph, who would not quit her; the parson likewise was induced, not only by curiosity, of which he had no small portion, but his duty, as he apprehended it, to follow them; for he continued all the way to exhort them, who were now breaking their hearts, to offer up thanksgivings, and be joyful for so miraculous an escape.

When they arrived at Booby-Hall, they Vol. II. Z were presently called into the parlour, when the pedlar repeated the same story he had told before, and insisted on the truth of every circumstance; so that all who heard him were extremely well satisfied of the truth, except Pamela, who imagined, as she had never heard either of her parents mention such an accident, that it must be certainly salse; and except the Lady Booby, who suspected the salsehood of the story from her ardent desire that it should be true; and Joseph, who seared its truth, from his earnest wishes that it might prove salse.

Mr Booby now defired them all to sufpend their curiosity, and absolute belief, or disbelief, till the next morning, when he expected old Mr Andrews and his wife to setch himself and Pamela home in his coach, and then they might be certain of certainly knowing the truth or falsehood of this relation; in which, he said, as there were many strong circumstances to induce their credit, so he could not perceive any interest the pedlar could have in inventing it, or in endeavouring to impose such a falsehood on them.

The Lady Booby, who was very little used to such company, entertained them all, viz. her nephew, his wise, her brother and sister, the beau, and the parson, with great good-humour at her own table. As to the pedlar, she ordered him to be made as welsome as possible by her fervants. All the company in the parlour, except the disappointed lovers, who fat fullen and filent, were full of mirth; for Mr Booby had prevailed on Joseph to ask Mr Didapper's pardon; with which he was perfectly fatisfied. Many jokes passed between the beau and the parson, chiefly on each others drefs; thefe afforded much diversion to the company. Pamela chid her brother Joseph for the concern which he expressed at discovering a new fister. faid, if he loved Fanny as he ought, with a pure affection, he had no reason to lament being related to her.--- Upon which Adams began to discourse on Platonic love; whence he made a quick transition to the joys in the next world: and concluded with ffrongly afferting, that there was no fuch thing as pleasure in this. At which Pamela and her husband smiled on one another.

This happy pair proposing to retire (for no other person gave the least symptom of desiring rest) they all repaired to several beds provided for them in the same house; nor was Adams himself suffered to go home, it being a stormy night. Fanny indeed often begged the might go home with the parson; but her stay was so strongly insisted on, that she at kult, by Joseph's advice, consented.

C H A P. XIV.

Containing several curious night-adventures, in which Mr Adams fell into many hair-breadth scapes, partly owing to his goodness, and partly to his inadvertency.

BOUT an hour after they had all feparated (it being now past three in the morning) beau Didapper, whose passion for Fanny permitted him not to close his eyes, but had employed his imagination in contrivances how to fatisfy his defires, at last hit on a method by which he hoped to effect He had ordered his fervant to bring him word where Fanny lay, and had received his information; he therefore arose, put on his breeches and night-gown, and stole foftly along the gallery which led to her apartment: and being come to the door, as he imagined it, he opened it with the least noise possible, and entered the chamber. A favour now invaded his nostrils which he did not expect in the room of fo fweet a young creature, and which might have probably had no good effect on a cooler lover. However, he groped out the bed with difficulty; for there was not a glimple of light, and opening the curtains, he whispered in Joseph's voice, (for he was an excellent mimic), 'Fanny, my angel, I am come to inform thee that I have difcovered the falsehood of the story we last night heard. I am no longer thy brother, but thy lover; nor will I be delayed the enjoyment of thee one moment longer. · You have fufficient assurances of my conflancy not to doubt my marrying you, · and it would be want of love to deny me the possession of thy charms?-So faying, he disencumbered himself from the little clothes he had on, and leaping into bed embraced his angel, as he conceived her, with great rapture. If he was furprifed at -receiving no answer, he was no less pleafed to find his hug returned with equal ardour. He remained not long in this fweet confusion; for both he and his paramour presently discovered their error. Indeed it was no other than the accomplished Slipslop. whom he had engaged; but though the immediately knew the person whom she had m staken for Joseph, he was at a loss to guess. at the representative of Fanny. He had tolittle feen or taken notice of this gentlewoman, that light itself would have afforded him no affittance in his conjecture. Beau Didapper no fooner had perceived his mitake, than he attempted to escape from the bed with much greater haste than he had made to it; but the watchful slipflop pre-Z 3 vented him. For that prudent woman, being disappointed of those delicious offerings which her fancy had promifed her pleasure, resolved to make an immediate sacrifice to her virtue. Indeed fhe wanted an opportunity to heal some wounds which her late conduct had, the feared, given her reputation: and as the had a wonderful presence of mind. she conceived the person of the unfortunate beau to be luckily thrown in her way to restore her Lady's opinion of her impregnable chastity. At that instant therefore, when he offered to leap from the bed, she caught fast hold of his shirt, at the same time roaring out, 'O thou villain! thou hast attacked ' my chastity, and, I believe, ruined me in my fleep; I will fwear a rape against thee, 'I will profecute thee with the utmost vengeance.' The beau attempted to get loofe, but the held him fast, and when he struggled, the cried out, 'Murder! murder! rape! robbery! ruin!' At which words Parson Adams, who lay in the next chamber, wakeful, and meditating on the pedlar's difcovery, jumped out of bed, and, without staying to put a rag of clothes on, hastened into the apartment whence the cries proceeded. made directly to the bed in the dark, where laying hold of the beau's skin (for Slipslop had torn his fhirt almost off) and finding his fkin extremely fost, and hearing him, in a low voice, begging Slipflop to let him go, he no longer doubted but this was the young woman in danger of ravishing, and immediately falling on the bed, and laying hold on Slipflop's chin, where he found a rough beard, his belief was confirmed; he therefore refeued the beau, who presently made his escape, and then turning towards Slipstop, received fuch a cuff on his chops, that his wrath kindling instantly, he offered to return the favour so stoutly, that, had poor Slipslop received the fift, which in the dark passed by her, and fell on the pillow, the would most probably have given up the ghost-----Adams, missing his blow, fell directly on Slipflop, who cuffed and scratched as well as she could; nor was he behind-hand with her in his endeavours: but happily the darkness of the night befriended her. She then cried she was a woman: but Adams answered she was rather the devil, and if the was, he would grapple with him; and being again irritated by another stroke on his chops, he gave her such a remembrance in the guts, that the began to roar loud enough to be heard all over the house. Adams then seizing her by the hair, for her double-clout had fallen off in the fcuffle), pinned her head down to the bolfter, and then both called for lights together.

The Lady Booby, who was as wakeful as any of her guests, had been alarmed from the beginning; and, being a woman of a boldspirit, the slipped on a night-gown, petticoat, and slipers, and taking a candle, which always burnt in her chamber, in her hand, she walked undauntedly to Slipslop's room; where she entered just at the instant as Adams had difcovered, by the two mountains which Slipflop carried before her, that he was concerned with a female. He then concluded her to be a witch, and faid. He fancied those breasts gave fuck to a legion of devils. Slipflop feeing Lady Booby enter the room, cried, ' Help! or I am ravished,' with a most audible voice: and Adams perceiving the light, turned hastily, and saw the Lady (as she did him) just as the came to the feet of the bed: nor did her modelly, when she found the naked condition of Adams, tuffer her to approach farther.—she then began to revile the parlon as the wickedest of all men, and particularly railed at his impudence in chufing her house for the scene of his debaucheries, and her own woman for the object of his bestiality. Poor Adams had before difcovered the countenance of his bedfellow, and now first recollecting he was naked, he was no less confounded than Lady Booby herfelf, and immediately whipt under the bed-cloaths, whence the chaste Slipslop endeavoured in vain to that him out. Then putting forth his head, on which, by way of ornament, he wore a flannel night-cap, he protested his innocence, and asked ten thousand pardons of Mrs Slipslop for the blows he had struck her, vowing he had mistaken her for a witch. Lady Booby then casting her eyes on the ground, observed something sparkle with great luftre, which, when she had taken it up, appeared to be a very fine pair of diamond-buttons for the fleeves. A little farther the faw the fleeve itself of a shirt with laced ruffles. 'Heydey!' fays she, 'what is the meaning of this?'- O Madam,' fays Slipflop, 'I don't know what hath happened, I have been fo terrified! Here may have been a dozen men in the room.' 'To whom belongs this laced shirt and jewels?' says the Lady. 'Undoubtedly,' cries the parson, to the young gentleman whom I mistook for a woman upon coming into the room, whence proceeded all the subsequent miflakes; for if I had suspected him for a man 'I would have feized him, had he been another Hercules, though indeed he feems ' rather to resemble Hylas.' He then gave an account of the reason of his rising from bed, and the rest, till the Lady came into the room; at which, and the figures of Slipflop and her gallant, whose heads only were vifible at the opposite corners of the bed. she could not refrain from laughter; nor did Slipflop perfit in accusing the parson of any motions towards a rape. The Lady therefore defired him to return to his bed as foors as the was departed, and then, ordering Slipflop to rife, and attend her in her own room; the returned herself thinker. When the was gone. Adams renewed his petitions for pardon to Mrs Slipflop, who, with a most Christian temper, not only forgave, but began to move with much courtefy towards him, which he taking as a hint to be gone, immediately quitted the bed, and made the best of his way towards his own; but unluckily, infread of turning to the right, he turned to the left: and went to the apartment where Fanny lay, who (as the reader may remember) had not flept a wink the preceding night, and who was fo hagged out with what had happened to her in the day, that, notwithstanding all thoughts of her Joseph, she was fallen into so profound a fleep, that all the noise in the adjoining room had not been able to diffurb Adams gropped out the bed, and turning the cloaths down foftly, a custom Mrs. Adams had long accultomed him to, crept in, and deposited his carcase on the bed-post, s place which that good woman had always assigned him.

As the cat or lap-dog of some levely nymph for whom ten thousand lovers languiln, lyes quietly by the fide of the charming maid, and, ignorant of the icene of delight on which they repose, meditates the future capture of a mouse, or surprisal of a plate of bread and butter; fo Adams lay by the fide of Fanny, ignorant of the paradife to which he was so near; nor could the emanation of fweets which flowed from her breath, overpower the fumes of tobacco which played in the parson's nostrils. And now fleep had not overtaken the good man, when Joseph, who had secretly appointed Fanny to come to her at the break of day, rapped foftly at the chamber door, which, when he had repeated twice, Adams cried, Come in, whoever you are.' Joseph thought he had midaken the door, though she had given him the most exact ditections: however, knowing his friend's voice, he opened it, and faw some female vestments lying on a chair. Fanny waking at the same instant, and Aretching out her hand on Adams's beard, the cried out, - O Heavens! where am I? Bless me! where am I?' faid the parson. Then Fanny screamed, Adams leaped out of bed, and Joseph Rood, as the tragedians call-it, like a statue of Surprise. 'How came she ' into my room?' cries Adams. 'How came vou into hers?' cries Joseph, in an astonish-' ment. 'I know nothing of the matter,' answered Adams, 'but that she is a vestal for me. As I am a Christian, I know not whether she is a man or woman. He is an infidel who doth not believe in witchcraft. * They as furely exist now as in the days of Saul. My cloaths are bewitched away 4 too, and Fanny's brought into their place." For he still insisted he was in his own apartment; but Fanny denied it vehemently, and faid, his attempting to persuade Joseph of fuch a falfehood, convinced her of his wicked 'How!' faid Joseph in a rage. hath he offered any rudeness to you?'-----She answered she could not accuse him of any more than villainously stealing to bed to her, which she thought rudeness sufficient, and what no man would do without a wicked Ioseph's great opinion of Adams was not eafily to be staggered, and when he heard from Fanny that no harm had happened, he grew a little cooler; yet still he was confounded, and as he knew the house, and that the women's apartments were on this fide Mrs Slipflop's room, and the men's on the other, he was convinced that he was in Fanny's chamber. Affuring Adams therefore of this truth, he begged him to give Some account how he came there. Adams then, standing in his shirt, which did not offend Fanny, as the curtains of the bed were drawn, related all that had happened, and when he had ended, Joseph told him, it was plain he had mistaken, by turning to the right, instead of the left. 'Odio!' cries Adams, ' that's true, as fure as fixpence, you have hit on the very thing.' He then traverfed the room, rubbing his hands, and begged Fanny's pardon, affuring her he did not know whether she was man or woman. That innocent creature firmly believing all he faid, told him she was no longer angry, and begged Joseph to conduct him into his own apartment, where he should stay himself till the had put her cloaths on. Joseph and Adams accordingly departed, and the latter Toon was convinced of the mistake he had committed; however, whilst he was dressing himself, he often afferted he believed in the power of witchcraft notwithstanding, and did not see how a Christian could deny it.

Vol.II.

A.a

C H A P. XV.

The arrival of Gaffer and Gammer Andrews, with another person not much expected; and a persect solution of the difficulties raifed by the pediar.

A S foon as Fanny was dreffed, Joseph returned to her, and they had a long conversation together, the conclusion of which was, that if they found themselves to be really brother and sister, they vowed a perpetual celibacy, and to live together all their days, and include a Platonic friendship for each other.

The company were all very merry at breakfast, and Joseph and Fanny rather more chearful than the preceding night. The Lady Booby produced the diamond button, which the beau most readily owned, and alledged that he was very subject to walk in his sleep. Indeed he was far from being asshamed of his amour, and rather endeavoured to infinuate that more than was really true had passed between him and the fair Slipslop.

Their tea was fcarce over, when news came of the arrival of old Mr Andrews and his wife. They were immediately introduced, and kindly received by the Lady Booby, whose heart went now pit-a-pat, as did those of Joseph and Fanny. They felt perhaps little less anxiety in this interval than Oedipus himself, whilst his fate was revealing.

Mr Booby first opened the cause, by informing the old gentleman that he had a child in the company more than he knew of; and taking Fanny by the hand, told him, this was that daughter of his who had been stolen away by gypfies in her infancy. Mr Andrews, after expressing some altonishment, assured his honour that he had never lost a daughter by gypfics, nor never had any other children than Joseph and Pamela. These words were a cordial to the two lovers: but had a different effect on Lady Booby. ordered the pedlar to be called, who recounted his story as he had done before. At the end of which old Mrs Andrews running to Fanny, embraced her, crying out, ' She is, ' she is my child!' The company were all amazed at this disagreement between the man and his wife; and the blood had now forfaken the cheeks of the lovers, when the old woman turning to her husband, who was more furprifed than all the reft, and having a little recovered her own spirits, delivered herself as follows: 'You may remember, ' my dear, when you went a ferjeant to Gibraltar, you left me big with child; you

' staid abroad you know upwards of three ' years. In your absence I was brought to bed, I verily believe, of this daughter-' whom I am fure I have reason to remember, for I funkled her at this very breaft till the day she was stolen from me. One afternoon, when the child was about a year, or a year and a half old, or thereabouts, two gypfy women came to the door and offered to tell my fortune. them had a child in her lap: I shewed them. ' my hand, and defired to know if you was ever to come home again, which, I remember as well as if it was but yesterday, they faithfully promifed me you should. the girl in the cradle, and went to draw them a cup of liquor, the best I had; when I returned with the pot (I am fure I was ' not absent longer than whilst I am telling it to you) the women were gone. I was * afraid they had stolen something, and looked and looked, but to no purpose, and Hea-' ven knows I had very little for them to fleal. At last hearing the child cry in the cradle, I went to take it up-but O the ' living! how was I surprised to find, in-' stead of my own girl that I had put in the cradle, who was as fine a fat thriving child ' as you shall see in a summer's day, a poor fickly boy, that did not feem to have are hour to live. I ran out, pulling my hair off, and crying like any mad after the women, but never could hear a word of them. from that day to this. When I came back. the poor infant (which is our Joseph there as fout as he now stands) lifted up his eyes upon me so piteously, that to be sure, notwithstanding my passion, I could not find f in my heart to do it any mischief. e neighbour of mine happening to come in at the fame time, and hearing the case, ade vised me to take care of this poor child, · and God would perhaps one day restore me · my own. Upon which I took the child " up, and fuckled it to be fure, all the world as if it had been born of my own natural body. And as true as I am alive, in a little time I loved the boy all to nothing as if it had been my own girl. Well, as I was faying, times growing very hard, I having two children, and nothing but my own work, which was little enough God knows to maintain them, was obliged to alk relief of the parish; but instead of giving it me, · they removed me by justices warrants, fifteen miles to the place where I now live. • where I had not been long fettled before you came home. Joieph (for that was the name I gave him myfelf - the Lord knows whether he was baptized or no. or by what name), Joseph, I say, seemed to be about five years old when you returned; ed; for I believe he is two or three years older than our daughter here;) for I am thoroughly convinced she is the same) and when you saw him you said he was a choping boy, without ever minding his age; and so I seeing you did not suspect any thing of the matter, thought I might e'en as well keep it to myself, for fear you should not love him as well as I did. And all this is veritably true, and I will take my oath of it before any justice in the king-dom.'

The pediar, who had been fummoned by the order of Lady Booby, listened with the utmost attention to Gammer Andrews's story; and when the had finished, asked her, if the supposititious child had no mark on its breaft? To which she answered, 'Yes, he had as fine a strawberry as ever grew in a garden.' This Joseph acknowledged, and unbuttoning his coat, at the intercession of the company, shewed to them. 'Well,' favs Gaffer Andrews, who was a comical fly old fellow, and very likely defired to have no more children than he could keep, ' your have proved, I think, very plainly, that this boy doth not belong to us; but how are you certain that the girl is ours? The parson then brought the pedlar forward, and defired him to repeat the story which he had communicated to him the preceding day at the alehouse: which he complied with and related what the reader, as well as Mr Adams, hath feen before. He then confirm ed, from his wife's report, all the circumflances of the exchange, and of the strawberry on Joseph's breast. At the repetition of the word Strawberry, Adams, who had feen it without any emotion, started, and cry'd. Bless me! fomething comes into my head. But before he had time to bring any thing out, a fervant called him forth. When he was gone, the pedlar affured Joseph, that his parents were persons of much greater circumstances than those he had hitherto mistaken for such: for that he had been stelen from a gentleman's house, by those whom they eall gypfies, and had been kept by them during a whole year, when looking on him as in a dving condition, they had exchanged him for the other healthier child, in the manner before related. He faid, as to the name of his father, his wife had either never known. or forgot it; but that the had acquainted him he lived about forty miles from the place where the exchange had been made, and which way, promising to spare no pains insendeavouring with him to discover the place.

JOSEPH ANDREWS.

But Fortune, which feldom doth good or ill, or makes men happy or miserable by halves, resolved to spare him this labour. The reader may please to recollect, that Mr Wilson had intended a journey to the Well, in which he was to pass through Mr Adams's parish, and had promised to call on him. He was now arrived at the Lady Booby's gates for that purpose, being directed thither from the parson's house, and had fent in the fervant whom we have above feen call Mr Adams forth. This had no fooner mentioned the discovery of a stolen child, and had uttered the word Strawberry, than Mr Wilson, with wildness in his looks, and the utmost eagerness in his words, begged to be shewed into the room, where he entered without the least regard to any of the company but Iofeph, and embracing him with a complexion all pale and trembling, defired to fee the mark on his breaft; and the parson followed him, capering, rubbing his hands, and crying out, His eft quem quæris; inventus eft, &c. Joseph complied with the request of Mr. Wilson, who no sooner saw the mark, than abandoning himfelf to the most extravagant rapture of passion, he embraced Joseph with mexpressible ecstafy, and cried out in tears of joy, 'I have discovered my son, I have him again in my arms!' Joseph was not fufficiently apprized yet, to taile the same delight with his father, (for fo in reality he was): however, he returned fome warmth to his embraces: but he no fooner perceived, from his father's account, the agreement of every circumstance, of person, time, and place, than he threw himself at his feet, and embracing his knees, with tears begged his bleffing, which was given with much affection, and received with fuch respect, mixed with fuch tenderness on both sides, that it affected all present: but none so much as Lady Booby, who left the room in an agony, which was but too much perceived, and not very charitably accounted for by some of the company.

6

JOSEPH ANDREWS. 285

C H A P. XVI.

Being the last. In which this true bistory is brought to a happy conclusion.

ANNY was very little behind her Jofeph, in the duty she expressed towards her parents, and the joy she evidenced in discovering them. Gammer Andrews kissed her, and said, She was heartily glad to see her: but, for her part, she could never sove any one better than Joseph. Gaffer Andrews testified no remarkable emotion; he blessed and kissed her, but complained bitterly that he wanted his pipe, not having had a whiss that morning.

Mr Booby, who knew nothing of his aunt's fondness, imputed her abrupt departure to her pride, and disdain of the family into which he was married; he was therefore defirous to be gone with the utmost celerity: and now, having congratulated Mr Wilson and Joseph on the discovery, he faluted Fanny, called her faster, and introduced her as such to Pamela, who behaved with great decency on the occasion.

Henow sent a message to his aunt, who returned, that she wished him a good journey, but was too disordered to see any company: he therefore prepared to set out, having invited Mr Wilson to his house; and Pamela and Joseph both so insisted on his complying, that he at last consented, having first obtained a message from Mr Booby, to acquaint his wife with the news; which, as he knew it would render her completely happy, he could not prevail on bimself to delay a moment in acquainting her with.

The company were ranged in this manner.

JOSEPH ANDREWS. 287

The two old people, with their two daughters, rode in the coach; the Squire, Mr Wilson, Joseph, Parson Adams, and the pediar proceeded on horseback.

In their way Joseph informed his father of his intended match with Fanny; to which, though he expressed some reluctance at first, on the eagerness of his son's instances he consented, saying, If she was so good a creature as she appeared, and he described her, he thought the disadvantages of birth and fortune might be compensated. He however insisted on the match being deserred till he had seen his mother; in which Joseph perceiving him positive, with great duty obeyed him, to the great delight of Parson Adams, who by these means saw an opportunity of sulfilling the church forms, and marrying his parithioners without a licence.

Mr Adams greatly exulting on this occafion, (for such ceremonies were matters of no small moment with him), accidentally gave spurs to his horse, which the generous beast disclaining, for he was of high mettle, and had been used to more expert riders than the gentleman who at present bestrode him, for whose horsemanship he had perhaps some contempt, immediately ran away full speed, and played so many antic tricks, that he tumbled the parson from his back; which Joseph perceiving, came to his relief. This accident afforded infinite merriment to the servants, and no less frightened poor Fanny, who beheld him as he passed by the coach; but the mirth of the one and terror of the other were soon determined, when the parson declared he had received no damage.

The horse having freed himself from his unworthy rider, as he probably thought him, proceeded to make the best of his way: but was stopped by a gentleman and his fervants who were travelling the opposite way; and were now at a little distance from the coach. They foon met: and as one of the fervants delivered Adams his horse, his master hailed him, and Adams looking up, presently recollected he was the justice of peace before whom he and Fanny had made their appearance. The parson presently saluted him very kindly; and the Justice informed him, that he had found the fellow who attempted to fwear against him and the young woman the very next day, and had committed him to Salifbury goal, where he was charged with many robberies.

Many compliments having passed between the parson and the Justice, the latter proceeded on his journey, and the former having with some distain refused Joseph's offer of changing horses, and declaring he was as able: a horseman as any in the kingdom, remounted his: beast, and now the company again proceeded, and happily arrived at their journey's end, Mr Adams; by good luck, rather than by good riding, escaping a second fall.

JOSEPH ANDREWS: 289

The company arriving at Mr Booby's house, were all received by him in the most courteous, and entertained in the most splendid manner, after the custom of the old English hospitality, which is still preserved in some very sew families in the remote parts of England. They all passed that day with the attack satisfaction; it being perhaps impossible to find any ser of people more folidly and fancerely happy: Joseph and Fanny foundmeans to be alone upwards of two hours, which were the shortest, but the sweetest imaginable.

In the merning, Mr Wilson proposed to his fon to make a visit with him to his mother; which, notwithstanding his dutiful inclinations, and a langing desire he had to see her, a little concerned him, as he must be obliged to leave his Fanny: but the goodness of Mr-Buoby relieved him: for he proposed to send his own coach and six for Mrs Wilson, whom Pamela so very paraestly invited, that:

Ver. IL Bb.

Mr Wilson at length agreed with the intreaties of Mr Booby and Joseph, and suffered the coach to go empty for his wife.

On Saturday night the coach seturned with Mrs Wilson, who added one more to this happy assembly. The reader may imagine much better and quicker too than I can describe, the many embraces and tears of joy which succeeded her arrival. It is sufficient to say, she was easily prevailed with to solve low her husband's example, in consenting to the match.

On Sunday Mr Adams performed the fervice at the Squire's parith church, the curate of which very kindly exchanged duty, and rode twenty miles to the Lady Booby's parith fo to do; being particularly charged not to omit publishing the banns, being the third and last time.

At length the happy day arrived, which was to put Joseph in the possession of all his wishes. He arose, and dressed himself in a neat, but plain suit of Mr Booby's, which exactly sitted him; for he resused all sinery; as did Fanny likewise, who could be prevailed on by Pamela to attire herself in nothing richer than a white dimity night gown. Her shift indeed, which Pamela presented her, was of the sinest kind, and had an edging of lace round the bosom: she likewise equipped her with a pair of fine white thread ttockings, which were all she would accept; for the wore one of her burn (hort round eared caps, and over it a little straw, hat, lined with cherry-coloured filk, and tied with a cherrycoloured ribbon. In this dress, she came forth from her chamber, blushing and breathing fweets; and was by Joseph, whose eyes Coarded fire, led to church, the whole family attending, where Mr Adams performed the ceremony; at which nothing was so remarkable, as the extraordinary and unaffected modelty of Fanny, unless the true Christian viety of Adams, who publickly rebuked Mr Booby and Pamela for laughing in fo facred a place, and on so solemn an occasion. Our parson would have done no less to the highest prince on earth: for though he paid all fubmillion and deference to his superiors in other matters, where the least spice of religion intervened, he immediately lost all respect of persons. It was his maxim, that he was a fervant of the Highest, and could not, without departing from his duty, give up the least article of his honour, or of his cause, to the greatest earthly potentate. Indeed he always afferted, that Mr Adams at church, with his furplice on, and Mr Adams without B h 2

TOSEPH ANDREWS. 291

that ornament, in any other place, were two very different persons.

When the church rites were over, Joseph led his blooming bride back to Mr. Booby's for the distance was so very little, they die! not think proper to use a coach); the whole company attended them likewife on foots and now a most magnificent entertainment was provided, at which Parfon Adams domonstrated an appetite surprising, as well as furpassing every one present. Indeed, the only persons who betrayed any deficiency on this occasion, were those an whole account the feaft was provided. They pampered their imaginations with the much more exquifite repair which the approach of might promised them; the thoughts of which filled both their minds, though with different fenfations; the one all delire, while the other. had her wishes tempered with fears.

At length, after a day passed with the utmost merriment, corrected by the stricted deeency; in which, however, Parson Adams, being well filled with ale and pudding, had given a loose to more facetiousness than was usual to him; the happy, the blessed momentarrived when Fanny retired with her mother, her mother-in-law, and her sister. She was fonn undersid; for she had no jewels to dopositie in their caskets, nor fine laces to fold with the sicest exactness. Undressing to her was properly discovering, not putting off ornaments after as all her charms were the gifts of Nature, she could divek herself of none. How, reader, shall I give thee an adequate idea of this tovely young creature? the bloom of roses and listes might a little is infirmate her complexion, or their single her sweetness; but to comprehend her entirely, conceive youth, health, bloom, neatness, and innosence, in her bridal bed; conceive all these in their utmost perfection, and you may place the charming Fanny's picture before your eyes.

JOSEPH ANDREWS 191

than he fled with the atmost eagerness to her. A minute carried him into her arms, where we that leave this happy couple to enjoy the private rewards of their constancy; rewards so great and sweet, that I apprehend Joseph neither envied the noblest duke, nor Fanny the finest duchefs that night.

The third day, Mr Wilson and his wife, with their son and daughter returned home; where they now live together in a state of bliss scarce equalled. Mr Booby hath with unprecedented generosity given Fanny a fortune of two thousand pounds, which Joseph-hath laid out in a little effate in the fates parish with his father, which he now occupies (his father having stocked it for him); and Fanny presides with most excellent management in his dairy; where, however, she is not at present very able to bustle much, being, as Mr Wilson informs me in his letter; extremely big with her first child.

Mr Booby hath presented Mr Adams with a living of one hundred and thirty pounds a-year. He at first resused it, resolving not to quit his parishioners, with whom he had lived so long: but, on recollecting he might keep a curate at this living, he hath been lately inducted into it.

The pedlar, befules feveral handleme prefents both from Mr Wilson and Mr Booby, is, by the latter's interest, made an exciseman; a trust which he discharges with such justice, that he is greatly beloved in his neighbourhood.

As for the Lady Booby, the returned to London in a few days, where a young captain of dragoons, together with eternal parties at cards, foon obliterated the memory of loseph.

Joseph remains bless'd with his Fanny, whom he dones on with the utmost tendermess, which is all returned on her side. The bappiness of this couple is a perpetual fountain of pleasure to their fond parents; and what is particularly remarkable, he declares he will imitate them in their retirement; norwill be prevailed on by any booksellers, ortheir authors, to make his appearance in high-life.

THE END

